This is the view which we think most military who have had any experience of the Native armies of India will feel inclined to endorse. It may be that the British complement of officers with a regiment is too small, and it certainly is a grave consideration, not unfringed with danger, that there should be positively no reserve of such officers. But, while remedying this evil, why not also do something to improve the condition of the Native officer by giving him a chance to prove his efficiency and capability for higher commands? To say the least of it, the experiment is worth a trial.

MURRAY—Feb. 10, at Gujranwala, Mary (May) Louisa, the wife of Ernest Radcliffe Murray, Forest Department.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

It is now in contemplation to abolish the posts of Second in Command of the Corps of Sappers and Miners in the three Presidencies.

The Viceroy, as Colonel of the Calcutta Volunteers, will inspect the battalion on Saturday, 29th March, and afterwards Lady Lansdowne will distribute the prizes.

LIEUTENANT PEACH, the Adjutant of the 3rd Madras Light Infantry, is the first Madras officer who has under the modified rules successfully passed in India the preliminary test in the Russian language. This officer is now en route to Russia for a course of further study in view of qualifying for the Interpreters' test.

The Government of India have been pleased to sanction the provision of a sum of one lakh of rupees in the Budget estimates for 1890-91 for camps of exercise in the three Presidencies, Bengal taking Rs. 65,000, Bombay Rs. 20,000, and Madras Rs. 15,000. The above sums include what may be expended on coast defence rehearsals.

The 34th Pioneers, two squadrons of the 12th Bengal Cavalry from Mooltan and two guns of the Kohat Mountain Battery rendezvous at Dera Ismail Khan and march up to Apozai, through the Gomal, to relieve the troops at Apozai. These, on being relieved, march to the same place through the Gomal, and then on to their several stations.

An alteration in the saddles of the British Cavalry and Royal Artillery of the 1st Army Corps is to be carried out regimentally, the Government of India having sanctioned the replacement of the flat iron arches by angle iron arches, which will be supplied by the Harness and Saddlery Factory at Cawnpore, the corps receiving an extra allowance of four annas per saddle for the extra labour involved.

An official committee at Saharunpur has just reported on a bale of Rogers' compressed fodder which had been buried for three years. It came out in a state of perfect preservation: "the bullocks ate it greedily, and it smelt quite fresh and sweet." Mr. Arthur Rogers' invention is a valuable one, and we should like to see its merits suitably recognised, by Government giving it and him something better than the shabby treatment to which he has hitherto been subjected.

The experiment of homing pigeons in India has proved a failure. The pigeons have been sold, their houses demolished and the materials sold by auction. The experiments were tried in Upper Burma, with the Punjab Frontier Force, in Assam, at Rawalpindi and Peshawar, and in the Quetta and Presidency Districts. Homing pigeons in India as a military accomplishment is therefore at an end, just at a time too when the French have proved successfully that swallows can be trained for the same purposes and are swifter than pigeons in their flight.

The mobilisation committee having lately had under their consideration the supply of fodder to British mounted corps and Native cavalry on field service, the Government of India have accepted their recommendations that grass-cutters of British mounted corps shall not be taken into the field, the supply of fodder for the horses devolving on the commissariat department, and in the case of Native cavalry that the fodder supply for the Government transport mules as well as for the regimental horses and grass-cutters' ponies be arranged for regimentally.

It is not often that misbehaviour on the part of the men of the Queen's Own Corps of Guides is brought to notice: but recently some of them have apparently been mutinous. Courts-martial were assembled at Murdan on the 15th and 16th ult., when (1) Havildar Mohbin (2) Lance-Naick Gul Baz, (3) Sepoy Mirwas, and (4) Sepoy Saidak were arraigned for mutiny and insubordination to a superior officer, and sentenced as follows:—(1) to be reduced to the ranks and imprisoned with hard labour for one year; (3) to be imprisoned for a similar term; and (4) to be imprisoned with hard labour for ten months. Lance-Naick Gul Baz was found not guilty and was released. It seems that, under the provisions of Section XIV, para. 16, of the Standing Orders of the Punjab Frontier Force, the company to which these men belonged was fined Rs. 300 owing to the theft of two rifles that had occurred; and when the salary for November was being distributed, minus the fine, they refused to receive theirs, and also attempted to induce their comrades to do so. In the case of Sepoy Saidak, when Subadar Raja was about to distribute the men's pay he said to this officer: "You caused one havildar to be confined. I am powerless to do anything to you here: but if I could I would"—or words to that effect.

MAJOR-GENERAL ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, C.B., late 78th Highlanders, who died on the 5th inst. at the Manse, Avoch, joined the service in February, 1840, became captain in March, 1853, colonel in July, 1872, and major-general in March, 1887. He served with the 78th Highlanders in the Persian War in 1857, including the expedition to Borazjoon, the night attack and battle of Kooshab, and bombardment of Mohumrah, receiving the medal with clasp. He served in Bengal with Havelock's Column from its first taking the field in July, 1857, including the actions of Futtehpore, Aoung, Pandoo Nuddee, Cawnpore, Onao, Buseerut Gunge (first and second, in command of the regiment on 5th August), Boorbeakechowkee, and Bithoor (severely wounded). He took part with Grant's column in the attacks on Maregunge and the Alumbagh (severely wounded, and horse killed); with Outram's Force at the Alumbagh, including the repulse of the numerous attacks on that position, and was in command of the left advance post with 150 men and four guns during the last attack on 16th March, 1858 (mentioned in despatches); and also in the operations ending in the final capture of Lucknow. He served in the Rohilcund Campaign in 1858, and was present at the capture of Bareilly, receiving the medal with two clasps, the brevet of major, and a year's service for Lucknow.

LIEUT.-COL. GEORGE MICHELL DEVEREUX HILL, late of the 20th Punjab Infantry, died at Dehradun on the 30th January. The deceased, who was the eldest son of the late Lieut.-Gen. George Mytton Hill, Bengal Staff Corps, entered the Indian Army in 1862, and had seen considerable active service, having taken part in the Abyssinian Expedition (medal), the Hazara Campaign of 1868, including occupation of the Black Mountain (medal and clasp), the Jowaki Expedition in 1877-8 (clasp), the Afghan War of 1879-80 with the Kuram Force, including capture of Ali Musjid (medal and clasp), the Mahsood Wuzeree Expedition, 1881, and the Egyptian Expedition of 1882 (medal and star).

THE Indian Daily News makes the following sensible remarks regarding the question of Cheap Passages to and from England :—People, it says, who want cheap passages would do best to decide upon availing themselves of the opportunities already offered. These opportunities may not be all that they could wish, but the means of getting home or out to India at reasonable rates can certainly be found by those who will look for them ; and if there is really any widespread desire for cheapness, and conviction that the higher charges are too high in comparison to the advantages of sorts they command, the most effectual way of giving it expression is to patronise the cheaper mode of travelling. By this means, a revolution may be created in the passenger service between England and India which the competition of an amateur-managed opposition line would never be able to effect. If the P. and O. Company, for instance, were to find their first-class cabins deserted while their second-class cabins were crowded, and the demand for cheap passages by outside lines increased, they would be forced to the conclusion that a change was necessary and desirable, both in their own interests and the interests of the public. It does not follow that they would be able to offer the same accommodation, comforts, privileges, &c., of their present first-class fares ; but if they were convinced that a great majority of Indian passengers had come to prefer economy to luxury, they might introduce changes that would render a reduction of rates possible. So long, however, as the demand for first-class accommodation at first-class rates continues as brisk as at present, no such change is possible ; and people who wish to economise will have to travel second-class or patronise some of the cheap steamers. The same conditions apply all along the line ; and at present, in spite of the cheap-passage agitation, we see little sign of a falling-off in the demand for the superior accommodation. There may be more people willing to take a trip home if they can manage it at moderate expense ; but the supply of cheap accommodation is equal to the demand, and may be expected to grow with it. The fact is that, in this as in other matters, people must be content to cut their clothes according to their cloth.

THE FUNERAL OF A BURMESE QUEEN.—The Rangoon Gazette reports the burial recently of the Meebya Queen, one of the wives of King Mindone Min, whose body had been lying some time in state at the residence of her daughter, near Rangoon. About nine o'clock the procession, which was nearly a mile long, started. White umbrellas, the special symbol of Burmese Royalty, were numerous, and the priests mustered in strong force. The shrines and other ornamental structures were ablaze with gold leaf, the bands of music were numerous, and the cartloads of presents for the priests would have sufficed to stock a bazaar with almost every conceivable article of food and wearing apparel, besides crockery, kerosene oil, fans, and furniture. The Princess, as chief mourner, walked in front of the coffin, preceded by her retinue of fifty white-robed women, walking in pairs ; before them girls strewed the path with roses. The Princess, like her attendants, was dressed in pure white, and wore no jewels whatever. She and her maids of honour bore in their hands the white rope attached to the coffin. The latter was slung from a pole and carried by bearers. Over it was thrown a splendidly decorated pall, piled high with bright flowers. The scene of the cremation was on the slope of the Shoay Dagon Pagoda, near Bahan, where an enclosure had been erected round the funeral pile, upon which the gilt coffin was laid to the sound of weird music. By desire of the Princess the coffin was opened to enable her to take a last look at her mother. The pile was then set fire to, and after the body had been entirely consumed the ashes were taken away to be cast on the broad bosom of the Irrawaddy.

"A practical handbook, which may help parents to answer the urgent question, what to do with their boys."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"There is a good deal of useful information combined with much sound advice in Sir W. Bellairs's book. . . . Parents will find in it how commissions are to be obtained, the examinations necessary to be passed and their scope, the cost of outfit, and the amount of private allowance that is advisable. . . . and detailed statements of all the articles which are necessary for a complete but not extravagant outfit. . . . The author's estimates are perfectly reasonable, and can be safely followed."—BROAD ARROW.

"Sir William Bellairs has omitted nothing likely to be of service either to the young man himself or to his parents or guardians."—MORNING POST.

Demy 8vo. 2 vols. 10s. 6d.

MODERN TACTICS. By Captain H. R. GALL (late 5th Fusiliers).

"Captain Gall's book will be of great value to military students going up for examinations. His style is lucid and simple, and the questions which are appended to each section of the subject are very well chosen."—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

"The style is clear and simple, and the explanations, helped as they are by numerous plans, will no doubt be easily grasped by those for whom they are written."—MORNING POST.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

THE GREAT SPECIFIC
CHOLERA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DIS-COVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLO-RODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE WAS UNDOUBTEDLY THE INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.
—See The Times, July 18th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE
PALLIATIVE IN NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY,
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETE-LY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."
From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1889.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, (with fully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, &c.
Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRU-PULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists,
1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

OUR VICEREGAL LIFE IN INDIA:

Being a Selection from my Journal

BY THE

MARCHIONESS OF DUFFERIN.

"Just what might have been expected from the talented and popular 'Vicerine.' As a record it is remarkably complete. There was no province of our teeming Indian Empire which was left uncovered by the Viceroyal tours; and an observant eye and lively pen made the best of Lady Dufferin's opportunity."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

"A record of life in India as it presented itself during a sojourn of four years in all its rich and manifold variety, to the wife of a Viceroy, could only fall to be deeply interesting through some deficiency of sympathy or lack of descriptive power. Happily, in neither of these prime requirements for her task is Lady Dufferin in any way wanting."—DAILY NEWS.

"A most animated account. It would be difficult to mention a work in which the infinite and varied pic-turesqueness of Anglo-Indian life is brought out more vividly."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"All who understand and sympathise with Indian life will hasten to read these two pleasant volumes. The journal is a running commentary on the multitudinous events which must crowd into such years as she passed in India, and is none the less pleasant for its simplicity and unpretentiousness. Perhaps the visit which Lady Dufferin paid to Burma three years ago will attract as much attention as any other part of her travels."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Estetman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KATE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPEN E.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other Service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.
You can change the Tricking Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm! The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—
J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 28th Feb. ; from Allahabad and Madras to the 26th Feb. ; and from Calcutta to the 25th Feb.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on 21st Feb. the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the care of Charitable Trusts was presented, the Select Committee's Report on the Bill to amend the Steamships (Inland) Acts was considered ; the Central Provinces Civil Courts Bill was passed ; and the Bill to amend the Merchant Seamen and Indian Merchant Shipping Acts was referred to a Select Committee.

IN order to prevent a recurrence of a check to the sale of salt such as that which occurred last year, an official announcement is made that there is no present intention to reduce the salt duty in the coming financial year. This will put a stop to certain reports already current of an impending election.

It has been finally decided to abolish the term "District Staff Officer" and to revert to the use of the old title of "Assistant Adjutant-General."

THE Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne attended the annual sports of the Ballygunge Cricket Club, her Excellency distributing the prizes to the successful competitors.

THE Viceroy's stay in the Dun on his way to Simla will extend to about a fortnight. His Excellency will probably march up through the hills, reaching Simla towards the end of April.

THE Commander-in-Chief has postponed his tour in Assam for the present, principally because of the many questions connected with the Military Estimates of the coming year that now call for his attention in Calcutta. His Excellency will probably make a short tour to Bareilly, Naini Tal, Almora and Ranikhet before going to Simla.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal was to leave for Chota Nagpur on March 2nd. Sir J. Ware Edgar and Mr. Nolan accompany him on tour.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT will visit the Umaria and Warora coalfields in April, thence proceeding to Bombay, and probably going over the Kathiawar railway system.

THE Maharaja of Vizianagram has vacated his seat as an additional Member of the Legislative Council, having completed his term of office.

MR. C. J. LYALL has returned from the Andamans, where he has been engaged making inquiries into the working of the Penal Settlement.

MR. A. P. MACDONNELL has been granted one year's furlough from March 10th, Mr. C. J. Lyall officiating in his place as Secretary of the Home Department.

MR. FANSHAW, Director-General of the Post Office, will probably proceed on nine months' leave from the middle of May.

MR. HILL, officiating Inspector-General of Forests, has arrived in Calcutta on return from his tour in Southern India.

MR. H. LEE, officiating Magistrate of Burdwan, has been offered and has accepted the Chairmanship of the Calcutta Municipality, in succession to Sir H. Harrison, and will take over charge at the end of next month.

MR. J. R. HALLETT is permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service from the 12th Feb.

MR. HANDLEY will act as Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta during Mr. Marsden's absence on leave this summer.

MAJOR ECCLES, of the Rifle Brigade, died at Bareilly on Feb. 21st from typhoid fever.

SADIK HUSSEIN, consort of the Begum of Bhopal, died at Bhopal on Feb. 24th. Some three or four years ago he was discovered in treasonable practices by Sir Lepel Griffin, and deprived of his official position and his title of Nawab by the Government of India. Since then he has lived a retired life at Bhopal, though constantly bent on getting restoration to the position he had forfeited.

MR. J. L. MACKAY, of Messrs. Mackinnon, Mackenzie, and Co., has been elected President of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce for the ensuing year, and Mr. W. W. Petrie Vice-President.

MR. H. T. OTTEWILL, of Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., succeeds Mr. Acton as Master of the Calcutta Trades Association.

AN East India Railway Committee has been formed in Calcutta, consisting of Mr. Robertson, Chief Engineer of the line, Mr. N. St. L. Carter, Traffic Manager, and Mr. J. Douglas, Examiner of Accounts, to make inquiries and recommendations with regard to the company's expenditure.

THE report of Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Patna Division, on the Durbhunga temple case, which is the grievance of the moment with the Native Press, will be presented immediately to the Bengal Government. The Lieutenant-Governor means to pass orders on it without delay.

AN epidemic of fever, affecting chiefly Natives, has broken out in Bombay during the past week.

MR. DE LITTLE, the English cricketer, fell from his horse at Meerut, and broke his collar bone.

COLONEL RAWLINS will command the Poona district in the absence of Major-General Solly-Flood, who has left Poona on sick leave.

THE troops operating in the north of the Lushai country have had their first encounter with the enemy. On the Feb. 23rd a reconnoitring party under Lieut. G. A. Brownrigg, of the Bombay Pioneers, came upon some Lushais strongly stockaded. In capturing the position Lieut. Brownrigg and a havildar of the 20th Punjab Infantry were severely wounded.

GENERAL TREGEAR reached Kalalyne last Wednesday, and imposed a fine of 1,000 maunds of rice on each of the Howcatas' villages, while he also recovered the captives taken two years ago from the Lall Savas villages.

THE Delhi-Kalka Railway Company propose making a line through the hills to Simla at a cost of fifty lakhs of rupees.

At a banquet given by the Maharajah of Jodhpore at Agra, February 26th, Sir Pertab Singh proposed the health of the Prince on behalf of the Maharajah. In acknowledging the compliment the Prince said :—"I thank you, Maharajah Sahib, for the kind way in which which you have, through Sir Pertab Singh, this evening proposed my health, and you, ladies and gentlemen, for the way you have responded to the toast. I can assure your Highness that it has been the greatest pleasure for me to visit Jodhpore, a pleasure I have looked forward to ever since I landed in India, specially having heard so much of your Highness's State and of the hospitality for which it is famous. Nowhere during my tour have I been more heartily welcomed or more splendidly entertained, and nowhere have I enjoyed myself more thoroughly than during my visit here. I am well aware that in former the Ralitores led the van of the Imperial army in many a hard-fought battle, and always distinguished themselves for their valour, and I am confident that they would again distinguish themselves and fight as bravely as of old if called upon to do so on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress. I am aware how great a pleasure Sir Pertab Singh's visit to England, as representing his Highness the Maharajah at the Jubilee festival, gave to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress, and how popular he made himself while there, and I know how great will be Her Majesty's gratification to receive a letter from me actually from his home, containing a description of my reception here and the amount of loyal expressions which have been used by him on behalf of your Highness in proposing my health." In conclusion, the Prince proposed the health of the Maharajah, wishing him and the State of Mawar every prosperity.

NOTES.

THE news by wire from India to-day will be found in the telegrams the Times correspondents, but somehow or another part of the news reads somewhat stale. For instance, we learnt by the Overland Mail of last week of Sir Lepel Griffin having been interviewed by "a gentleman of the Press," when he was reported to have said very much the same thing as what is reported in the Times telegram to-day. Can it be that Sir Lepel is undergoing a series of journalistic questions? Possibly; but we do not think that he is a man of such serenity of mind and of such patient temper as to allow himself to be put more than once to the torture of the inquisitor.

THE Daily News correspondent wires that the discussion on Lord Cross's Bill shows that many moderate men among the Europeans and Natives would approve of a modified elective system as proposed by Lord Dufferin. Very likely; but this does not embrace all the wants of the Congress delegates. The Pioneer to-day touches upon this very point, showing that the basis suggested by Lord Dufferin would not satisfy the Congress. "This was made abundantly clear at the Bombay meeting, where Mr. Eardley Norton, in submitting the principal resolution, said it was of no use offering them representation through corporate bodies such as Municipalities or Chambers of Commerce, who would send up members to the Provincial Councils. That would, in Mr. Norton's opinion, be to leave the control still in the hands of the Government, whereas the aim of the Congress was to put it directly in the hands of the people; and the resolution adopted accordingly insisted on the principle of direct elective representation. Parliament," continues the Allahabad paper, "will therefore have to choose between granting a fully elective representation, or it might as well grant none at all; and were it to do the former it would fly in the face not only of Lord Lansdowne, but of Lord Dufferin and every statesman of sagacity and experience who has had to do with India."

THE Indian papers are circulating the information that Lord Lansdowne has communicated to the authorities at Home his own and the universal wish that Sir Frederick Roberts's tenure of office should be prolonged for a year, but that no decision will be come to until after the Army Estimates have been discussed. The rumour in the Military Clubs here is to the effect that the decision has been virtually made, and that Lord Wolseley goes to India when Sir Frederick Roberts's term of command expires, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught taking the place of his Lordship at the War Office. But this may be only gup too.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has won golden opinions for himself during his command of the Bombay Army, and he has proved himself a thorough professional soldier. His appointment to the War Office may or may not be the stepping-stone to a higher place when the Duke of Cambridge retires; but the army, officers and men, would hail with satisfaction the nomination of the young Duke to the chief post in the army when the present popular Commander-in-Chief chooses to seek the well-earned repose he is entitled to. Mr. Labouchere and his friends will of course oppose such an appointment being made, and will denounce it as a gross Court job—but fortunately they have not yet got the power to prevent it.

A BOMBAY paper having stated that the complaints against Lord Connemara lodged by Lady Connemara in the Divorce Court here involved the reputation of several well-known names in Madras society, Messrs. Kirby and Millet, her ladyship's solicitors, have written to the paper in question to contradict that statement, and it stands contradicted accordingly—the journal which spread the report adding, "We are assured that it is without foundation." Why then have made it—honest Indian contemporary?

THERE was a "dancing girl's" case going on at the Lahore Court when the mail left, which brought out in evidence facts concerning the earnings of the lady, enough to make the Queen of any European ballet envious indeed. The Indian lady had been assaulted and hit upon the nose, "an incident which gave her great anxiety, as the mark was likely to be a bar to her profession." So the Court had to consider the question of possible loss of income. She said that on all great occasions her services were required at Jamú, Patiala, Bahawalpore, and Kapurthala. At Jamú she used to receive from Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 20,000 a-night for dancing before the Maharaja, and Rs. 2,000 a-night from the Raja of Kapurthala. There were seven legal practitioners engaged on both sides, as money was no object; the leading counsel for the plaintiff declaring that his client "possessed an unparalleled position as a dancing girl." We should think so.

THE advent of General Strachey and Sir A. Rendel "is likely," the Englishman believes, "to bear fruit in the shape of important administrative changes, and in the reduction of establishments on the East Indian Railway. Among other matters it is, we understand, very possible that they may deal with the contingency of the early retirement of their present popular Agent. We refer to this for the reason that it is rumoured that more than one of our Royal Engineer railway officers is likely to be a candidate for this important post, and it is therefore not premature to record our protest against the appointment of a military man. Surely the trading public, who have so much to do with the railway, should be consulted. The official shears have also begun to be applied to the higher officials in the employment of the East Indian Railway. The board of directors at home are said to have appointed to the discharge of this duty Mr. Robertson, the Chief Engineer, Mr. Carter, the Traffic Manager, and Mr. Douglas, the Deputy Auditor. The proposed reductions will not, it is reported, affect so much the lower branches of the service as those at the heads of departments."

THE Bombay Gazette says, regarding the forthcoming Indian Budget:—"It may now be regarded as certain that the Government of India will, at end of the present financial year, possess a surplus considerably larger than was estimated—perhaps even tenfold larger. Exchange and opium have produced this gratifying result. Both items proved far more satisfactory than was anticipated. There is now, however, a downward tendency, which is likely to increase. But the end of the year is now so near at hand that the actuals will in any case much exceed the anticipated surplus. It is too soon yet to attempt to make a forecast for the Budget of the next financial year. A large surplus can scarcely be looked for, and Sir David Barbour will have reason to be thankful if he can escape a deficit. The military charges will be unusually heavy, owing largely to the arming of the European regiments with the magazine rifle and other sources of exceptional expenditure. On the other hand, it is not by any means certain that exchange and opium will be as favourable next year as they have been in that which is now coming to a close. We are sorry to hear on good authority that there is much anxiety for the crops from Behar to Peshawar, owing to the absence of the rain usual before February. If rain do not fall at once there is some reason to fear that there may be distress and suspensions of revenue over a large area. All things considered the forthcoming Budget may be expected to balance fairly, but having in view contingencies which are not unlikely to arise there is little ground to hope that Sir David Barbour will be as happily circumstanced as Mr. Goschen with a large surplus to dispose of."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 16.

Although the text of Lord Cross's Indian Councils Bill has not yet reached this country, the telegraphic reports of the debates in the House of Lords are attracting much attention and form the subject of discussion in the Press throughout India. While the Congress organs continue to condemn it, the more moderate Native newspapers are prepared to welcome it, or at least to receive it as an earnest of a wider measure in the future. The Indian Spectator, a Native paper published in Bombay, commenting on Mr. Hume's letter, which I quoted last week, says Mr. Hume evidently takes no account of the fact that election in municipal self-government has not produced the magical effect he expects in a larger field. The same paper would welcome Lord Dufferin's proposal of partial election by municipalities and other constituted bodies, and regrets that the Congress did not confine its demand to such a scheme. It cannot hold the Government responsible for not granting the wider demand, and it fears that public opinion is likely to be led away from some important defects in the Bill by the glamour of an elective franchise.

The veteran statesman, Sir Madhava Rao, has addressed another letter to the Press, which is worth quoting. He says:—

"If Lord Cross's Councils Bill passes, as would seem likely, would it not be well for our political agitation to come to a quiet and dignified close? The good and disillusioned Mr. Hume will probably not return to India. Mr. Banerji will probably retrace his steps to the radiant plains of Bengal, no doubt a wiser and a sadder man. Let all sensible men in India lapse into normal life; let our local orators shelve the style of 'Ruin seize thee, ruthless King, confusion on thy banners wait.' But let us not despair; the Government is sure to make the best possible selections. Let the new councillors afford modest, honest, and useful advice, and prepare the way for a brighter era."

On the other hand, a writer in the Hindu, a Madras journal, protests against the Bill. He would have every respectable Native gentleman enter into a formal compact to refuse nomination to the Councils till the Government concedes the partially elective system. He would honeycomb India with political associations. He would have Indian politicians constantly before the English public, and would expose every job and assail every indiscretion till, in despair at their importunity, if not in recognition of the justice of their prayer, England should terminate a system which is paralysing the people of India.

Numerous extracts of a somewhat similar nature might be made from other newspapers of the Congress party; but how little right they have to speak, as they claim to speak, in the name of the people of India is amply proved by the petition, referred to in previous telegrams, which the Mahomedan community are now preparing to present to Parliament. That petition protests against the introduction of the principle of election. It expresses the belief that the effect of that principle would be to destroy the even-handed justice which hitherto has been the basis of British rule, and to place the petitioners and other minorities in a position almost intolerable, subject to classes actively hostile to their welfare. It goes on to point out that the Indian Mahomedans number not less than 50,000,000; that they are a factor of great importance in Indian politics; that, scattered as they are throughout India, they must of necessity be out-voted; that in the event of a popular agitation appealing to the religious feelings of the Hindoos, such as the agitation now afloat to prohibit cow killing, scarcely a single Mahomedan member could be returned, and the Mahomedans would be deprived of their most important articles of food. It goes on to show that the Mahomedans, being backward in English education, have not been able to make their wishes known as the Hindoos have, and that any system of proportional representation would not protect their interests, as the Hindoos would be in a majority of four to one. They, therefore, pray Parliament to retain the principle of nomination by the Government of all members of the Indian Councils.

Prince Albert Victor left the Nepal Terai on Tuesday, after a week of most successful sport. He arrived at Baroda on Thursday evening, and was received at the railway station by the Gaekwar and the British Resident. On Friday the Gaekwar took his Royal guest to witness the sport of deer-hunting by cheetahs. Several public buildings were inspected in the afternoon, and in the evening there was a State banquet. The city was illuminated. Prince Albert Victor now proceeds to Bombay, where he stays a few days before embarking.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Bombay for Hongkong on Thursday. The Governor and other notables saw them off, and the president of the municipal corporation presented an address referring to the manner in which they had endeared themselves to the people of India and to the valuable public services the Duke had rendered. The Duke, in replying, said it had given him the greatest satisfaction to be connected with the Bombay Army, and then paid a compliment to the abilities of the Governor and of his successor in the command.

A few days earlier the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were entertained at dinner at the Yacht Club. In replying to the toast of his health, the Duke said the recent naval manoeuvres had proved exactly what he had expected—namely, that the Bombay defences with their present armament were absolutely useless and could not oppose a naval attack. In the absence of Admiral Fremantle's fleet in Zanzibar waters, the naval element of defence was quite useless, because the ships were without crews and had neither gunners nor firemen to enable them to supply the deficiencies of the land defences. The greatest result of the operations might be that the attention of the Home Government would at length be given to the requisitions for military necessities sent through the Indian Government.

The Rev. James Johnstone, who came out from England for the purpose of establishing societies for the diffusion of useful literature in India, held a highly successful meeting in Bombay last week. Many leading citizens were present, and a society was formed similar to those already established in Calcutta and Madras. Mr. Justice Scott pointed out that the society might do excellent service by translating into the vernaculars such works as had a wide-world interest, as well as by diffusing standard English books.

Jhunda, the notorious dacoit, whose death in an encounter with the police was mentioned by me last week, appears from the accounts of his life given by the up-country papers to have been a kind of Indian Robin Hood. He began his career in the Native army, but soon left the service for the more congenial occupation of robbery. In 1874 he was captured and sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment. After breaking his arm in an attempt to escape he remained in Meerut Gaol till 1888, and became the most expert carpet weaver in the prison. On his release he collected a band which soon became the terror of Meerut and the adjoining districts. His usual course of operations was to pounce upon a village and call upon the local Shroff or banker to produce his bonds and receipts, which were then publicly burnt, while the Shroff himself was plundered. This style of proceeding naturally made Jhunda popular with the indebted classes, who form a large proportion of the Indian rural population, and by their aid he has succeeded in defying the police for the last two years. Like his English prototype, he is also said to have often been charitable to the poor. There was at first some doubt whether he was actually killed, but his identity is now placed beyond question.

The case of O'Hara, a private in the Leinster Regiment, was decided by five Judges of the Calcutta High Court on Tuesday. They held that there had been a misdirection of the jury and an improper admission of evidence at the trial, and accordingly ordered the conviction to be quashed and the prisoner to be discharged. The case has excited much interest throughout the country. Beyond all doubt an unoffending Native was brutally murdered at Dumdum, eight miles from Calcutta, one night last November. It seems equally beyond doubt that the murder was committed by one or more of four soldiers who managed to get out of barracks that night, but apparently there is no possibility of bringing the crime home, as two of the four were pardoned on turning Queen's evidence, a third was acquitted, while the conviction of the fourth has now been quashed as having been obtained by tainted evidence.

Influenza seems now to be well established in India, accounts of its prevalence coming from Bombay, Poonah, Jubbulpore, Benares, Lucknow, and elsewhere.

The Sialkot and Jummoo railway extension was opened on Thursday.

The Chinese Amban, with a suite and an escort of Chinese soldiers, arrived in Calcutta from Darjeeling on Tuesday, and was received at the station by a deputation representing the Government, while a large number of the Chinamen who now form a considerable and thriving community in Calcutta assembled to do honour to their distinguished countryman. The following day he was received in State by the Viceroy. It is understood that all the details of the negotiations regarding Sikkim are now settled, and the treaty is only awaiting formal signature. The Amban remains in Calcutta a few days longer and then returns to his post in Tibet.

BELOOCHISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 16.

It was rumoured at the beginning of the week that the Suliman Khel tribesmen intended to attack Apozai, the new British post in the Zhob country, on Friday, and some reinforcements were despatched thither, but the storm appears to have blown over, the tribes probably finding the place too strong for them.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 16.

It has been decided to immediately disband three regiments of Madras Infantry. The disbanded regiments will be replaced by three military police battalions, which will be incorporated with the Madras army, but will serve permanently in Burma. The Chin, Kubovally, and Shan levies will probably be the police battalions to be converted into regular regiments.

The following four regiments leave Burma for India this season:—The 10th, 17th, and 33rd Bengal Native Infantry, and the 42nd Goorkhas.

Sir Lepel Griffin left by the last mail for Calcutta. The ruby mines still engage public attention. Some days prior to Sir L. Griffin's departure the Rangoon Times published a long account of an interview which one of its correspondents had with him. Referring to certain localities where rubies had been found outside the Mogok district, and in reply to a question as to what concession the Ruby Mines Company had for the rest of Burma, Sir L. Griffin said:—

"The Government have not conceded and will not concede land to other people, however much they may think of it. There are good rubies at Sagyan, a little way down the river, which, I think, may be worked; but we have a preferential right. The Government gave us the right of taking it up if we chose, and we certainly shall choose if the Government wish it worked at all. We shall not let anybody else work it. Even if we raise a subsidiary company to do it, it will be worked."

This declaration of the position and rights of the Ruby Mines Company causes much surprise. Hitherto it has been understood that the right to mine for rubies conceded to the company was limited to a district about 400 square miles round Mogok. The company now apparently claim exclusive mining rights for rubies over all Upper Burma. If such a wide concession has been granted the Government ought certainly not to allow the mines outside the Mogok district to remain unworked. A large revenue may be raised if concessions are granted to mine for rubies in the districts outside the tract worked by the present company. Although all other matters connected with mines are under the control of the Financial Commissioner, Sir C. Crosthwaite retains in his own hands all matters connected with rubies. Dissatisfaction is felt that no rules have been published stating the terms on which the Government is prepared to grant mining concessions, while concessions are being granted to some fortunate applicants.

A news telegram announces that Sir J. Gorst has informed the House of Commons that the rules by which concessions in the oil fields might be obtained have been issued. If by this he meant that any such rules have been published in Burma, Sir J. Gorst is misinformed. No rules of any kind have been published.

Sir C. Crosthwaite has left for Fort Stedman to hold a durbar of Shan chiefs.

The recent conspiracy in Mandalay had more extensive ramifications than was at first believed.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, MARCH 16.

Telegraphic communication with Brigadier-General Symons has been interrupted for some days. He left Haka on the 8th inst. for the Tashon Ywama with a force consisting of 100

Borderers, 150 Goorkhas, 65 Bengal Sepoys, 30 Sappers, and two guns. Intelligence is hourly expected of the capture of the Ywama.

Owing to the approach of the rainy season the troops comprising the Chin-Lushai field force must return to Burma at a very early date.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 16.

There was little news of interest from the Lushai force last week. Lienpunga still refuses to surrender. The party sent to meet Brigadier-General Symons's force at Haka have returned to Colonel Tregear's column. They estimate the distance from Fort Tregear to Haka at 75 miles.

Three posts only will be held on the Lushai border for the present—Lungleh, Thanrumah, and Darjow Klang. The last-named will be garrisoned by troops, the other two by frontier police.

The river Koladain has been fixed as the boundary between Bengal and Burma.

THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

(Medical Record.)

This ancient institution is on the anvil of reform, and the heavy hammer of the reformer is rumoured as being balanced in impatient greed to wield a deathblow to its splendid form. A severance of its dual functions as a civil and military service is the aim of those who seek in some way or other to satisfy their cravings for change, and a supposed increased efficiency of the medical services of India. If the splendour of its past history could save the service from the spoliation which such changes really would accomplish, then history would come to the rescue with undoubted success. The brilliant record of its labours in peace and in war, in politics as well as in science, the important part played by its officers in the early history of the British occupation of India towards the great task of attaining and civilising the extensive empire over which England now holds undisputed sway, is enough to claim the admiration and rouse the envy of any administration in the world. The grand medical colleges of India to-day, the vast army of locally educated physicians and surgeons, whose work of mercy in the homes of the long-neglected poor in our largest cities and in the smallest and remotest villages of this empire, speak volumes for the grandeur of its work. The beautiful hospitals which now cover the four corners of this land are a monument to the credit of the Indian Medical Service. India herself will never fail in her gratitude and praise for the blessings which have come to her from England through the direct agency of the officers of this grand old service. But the spirit of militarism is rampant in the service, and it is this insatiable longing in some, for a greater prominence being given to their military rank, nomenclature, and standing that now rankles in the mind of the administration and enforces a reorganisation which must inevitably efface the recognition of its important, efficient, and most cherished civil organisation. This hankering after a purely military designation, now conceded after years of fruitless struggling, will ere long have obliterated the ancient claim of the service to civil duties, by rendering their continuance a huge anomaly in the very existence of this strong significance inseparable from the military titles sought by some of our professional brethren in the army. The title, lieutenant, captain, major, colonel, and field-marshal for a matter of that, may carry with them a deal of military clat, but such post-fixes have a price, and that price may discount and disparage the traditional claims of a service now made so purely military as to render the existence in its establishment of a purely civil body a glaring and positive anomaly. The whole question of the Medical Services of the army, both British and Indian, in this country sadly needs careful overhauling, both from an economic and an administrative point of view. For the present, in the face of threatened changes in the Indian Services, it is hoped that their civil capacity and functions will not be underrated when considering the needs of the army: for these services, though essentially military, are fulfilling civil duties of enormous value to the country at large, an imperfect consideration of which might lead to disastrous failure in the near future of the civil medical administration of the British Indian possessions.

FROM CALCUTTA TO SIMLA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We understand that Mr. Duff Bruce, Consulting Engineer to the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway Company, who came out from England to inspect the line, has completed his inspection, and expresses himself as well satisfied with the progress made and the present position of the works. The embankment has now been completed throughout the entire length of the line from Delhi to Kalka, and the foundations of the large bridges over the Ghuggur, Markunda, Domla, and Tangri are practically completed. The piers of these bridges are now in progress, some being already completed; and the erection of the girders, which are now arriving, will shortly be commenced. The permanent way has been laid for a distance of nearly forty miles from Delhi towards Umballa, and about thirty miles from Umballa towards Kalka. Ballast and material trains are now running daily over these sections, and the laying of the remainder of the line is proceeding at the rate of about one mile per day. Station buildings and other works are in progress throughout the entire length of the line, and it is confidently anticipated that the railway will be completed and ready to open for regular traffic by the 1st of October next.

When it is remembered that it is scarcely a year yet since the works were commenced we think it will be generally admitted that excellent progress has been made in the prosecution of the works. The prompt manner in which the necessary land was made over to the Engineers no doubt greatly facilitated the construction work at the commencement; but it is to the admirable arrangements which were made by the Agent and his staff for carrying on the works and obtaining supplies of labour and material that the present forward position of the line is primarily due. We doubt if on any Railway in India, through similar country, and requiring, as this has done, a considerable extent of bridge-work and flood-openings, the same rate of progress has been achieved; and we congratulate Mr. W. Way and the members of his staff on the successful progress they have been able to show as the result of their year's work.

This Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway, as is generally known by our readers, will, when completed, be handed over to be worked and maintained by the East Indian Railway Company. Kalka will then become the terminal station of the East Indian Railway system in the Punjab. In a recent issue we referred to a report that the result of General Strachey's visit to India would probably be an increase in the speed of the mail trains on that system to an average rate of thirty miles an hour, including stoppages. At present the mail train from Howrah to Allahabad averages twenty-eight miles an hour, and between Allahabad and Delhi twenty-three miles, including stoppages. But there seems to be no reason whatever why the rate of speed attained below Allahabad should not be continued on to Delhi; and by reducing the number of stoppages at small stations the average speed throughout could easily be increased to thirty miles an hour.

We have reason to believe that this increase of speed will shortly be introduced, and that on the opening of the Delhi-Kalka line in October next the same rate of speed will be continued throughout to Kalka. This will effect a very great reduction in the time now occupied in a journey between the Lower Provinces and the Punjab or Simla, and do much to reduce the fatigue of a long railway journey in the hot season. On the completion of the D.-U.-K. Railway, the distance from Calcutta to Umballa will be covered in 36 hours, at present it takes 47 hours; Kalka will be reached in about 37½ hours, and the whole journey from Calcutta to Simla, allowing 8½ hours for the tonga service, in 46 hours—or one hour less than it now takes to get to Umballa. There seems, moreover, to be now some prospect of the light railway from Kalka to Simla being pushed on, and if that line is constructed the time will be further reduced by from 2½ to three hours, while the fatigue of this journey would be very much lessened. Practically, therefore, one result of the construction of the D.-U.-K. Railway will be to effect a saving of a whole day in the journey between Calcutta and Simla, as it cannot now be comfortably done in much less than 66 hours.

On the Bombay Mail an important saving would also be effected. At present the Mail train between Umballa and Delhi, to connect with the Bombay and Baroda Mail, takes ten hours to do the journey; by the D.-U.-K. route the distance will be covered in a few minutes over four hours. Competition will also probably have the effect of putting a little more life into the North-Western system; but they will never be able to effect such a saving in time as would put them into a position to compete with the new route. These are important changes, the effect of which has not yet probably been fully realised. Simla will be brought considerably nearer to Calcutta, and the time occupied in the transfer of the Public offices will be materially reduced if the Hill line from Kalka to Simla is constructed, and all the facilities of through railway communication made available.

This would help to remove some of the objections taken by the Calcutta community to the annual Simla exodus, as Simla would then become, by fast trains and through railway communication, one of the most easily accessible Hill stations in India.

VACCINE experiments on Pasteur's method are to be carried out at the Hissar cattle farm shortly.

THE VETERINARY CAREER IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Mr. Steel, whose paper on "Indian Cattle," which was read before the Natural History Society, has reprinted in his Quarterly Journal of Veterinary Science in India his report to Government on the working of the Bombay Veterinary College in 1888. The most important matters dealt with by the Principal of the College are the entrance test and the future employment of the students. Mr. Steel's own opinion on the former question is that a suitable test in general education should be held to be sufficient, without demanding that candidates should be matriculated. The acceptance of this view would perhaps be facilitated if the test were directed in some degree to the special character of the students' future course—that is to say, if it were made sufficiently scientific to ascertain his aptitude for the College course. It might be possible in that way to provide a more efficient preliminary test than the Matriculation Examination. But it is obvious that the two questions hang together. A high test would not repel students if the veterinary career were an assured and a remunerative one; but that is just the point upon which information is scarce and forecasts are uncertain. Outside the Presidency towns and the Government Veterinary Department the profession can scarcely be said to exist, and whether or not a trained practitioner can make a living up-country is a question that even now has to be answered by experiment. The Government have not yet made up their minds whether or not to establish a Civil Veterinary Department, though they seem to welcome any attempt that may be made by District Boards and Municipalities to entertain veterinary officers of their own, and to establish veterinary dispensaries. Mr. Steel notes with satisfaction that several districts have considered the subject, and are negotiating with a view to establishing hospitals or dispensaries, and it is no small testimony to the work already done by the College at Parel that the majority of these are districts to which the College has already done service by sending its students as cattle-disease inspectors. If the question whether in the localities in which a veterinary practitioner's services are most needed he could be certain of a living is answered by analogy the answer will not be a very favourable one. In how many rural districts would a graduate of the Grant Medical College have a chance of earning enough to pay his rent in, at all events, the early part of his career? He might practice the yunani system of medicine, but then it was just in order to learn a better system that he was sent to college, just as it was in order to establish a more excellent way of treating the diseases of cattle than that which the Native salutris teach that the Parel College was founded, and that Mr. Steel is enabled to carry on his excellent work in that institution. He hopes "that each graduate sent out will act as a centre for the diffusion of knowledge on rational treatment of disease." The question is whether such fees as he may be able to earn from a cattle-owning community, who are for the most part very poor, and who have not yet learnt to prefer scientific treatment to empiricism, will suffice to keep him. The Government may have good reason for hesitating to add to the cost of the public service by creating a Civil Veterinary Department, and we are not disposed to accept the argument that because they are training an order of veterinary practitioners they ought to find a living for them when trained. But the special circumstances of the case ought to be taken into account. No good will be done by educating a profession, and then turning its members adrift amongst a population who have yet to learn the value of their services. It may be that the best solution to the problem will be found in following a middle course between leaving veterinary graduates to make their career without aid from public authority, and organising them into a Civil Department. Government, for example, might meet such Local Boards and Municipalities as are willing to entertain a veterinary surgeon and establish a veterinary dispensary by a grant from provincial funds. There seems to be serious practical objections to the laissez faire method of treating this subject, and it is to be hoped that some conclusion will be come to in regard to it ere long.

LADY DUFFERIN'S ASSOCIATION.

(Pioneer.)

The National Association for supplying female medical aid to the women of India, has now been in existence five years, and the record of the work done during the first year of Lady Lansdowne's tenure of office as Lady President shows that steady progress is still the word. One of the most important events on the catalogue was the outcome of the Marchioness of Dufferin's untiring zeal. When she left India the founder of the Association by no means ceased to interest herself in the work, and it was chiefly due to her influence and efforts that the United Kingdom Branch was formed and organised.

last year. Besides bringing the aims of the movement prominently before the British public, and collecting considerable sums to aid in its promotion, the Branch will relieve the Central Committee of all anxiety regarding the choice of the lady doctors who are sent out from home—a very important gain—and besides this will pay their passages and outfits, thereby saving the Central Committee a considerable item of expenditure. In India also numerous branches were established during the year, one of them a provincial branch for Beluchistan, and the others local branches, the chief being at Meerut, Cawnpore, Bijnor, Moradabad, Bareilly, Badaun, Ghazipur, Baraich, Gya, Sholapur, Shikarpur, and Dibrugarh. From this list it will be seen that the movement has been particularly active and successful in the North-West Provinces. So much zeal, again, has been displayed in the erection of local hospitals and dispensaries that the Central Committee deem it prudent to utter a word of caution on this point. Provincial Committees have, it is remarked, occasionally constructed hospitals when the guaranteed income of the local branch was insufficient for their support and maintenance, and such a course is very properly deprecated, as it can only tend to discredit the movement, or else constitute an excessive drain on the central funds. At the present time, however, the financial position is fairly satisfactory. Although the receipts from ordinary sources have, as was expected would be the case, fallen off slightly, the total amount invested by the Central Committee and its branches has now reached the very respectable figure of eleven lakhs of rupees, giving an annual income of nearly Rs. 50,000; and this without including a sum of nearly two lakhs which we are told is either in the hands of certain District Committees, or promised to them. Finally, the reports regarding the progress made in female medical education are extremely encouraging. The number of female students has risen from 220 to 238, and such lady doctors as have already passed out of college to take posts as assistant surgeons in hospitals or engage in private practice have, so far as can be learned, acquitted themselves very creditably. The record of the year is thus, taken altogether, one which the heads of the Association and the friends of suffering womankind in general can view with great satisfaction.

FAILURES AT EXAMINATIONS.

(Pioneer.)

From time to time publicity is given to complaints against the stringent examinations at Indian Universities, the increase in the percentage of "failures" among students being quoted in proof of the contention that the standards are too high or the examiners too severe in their judgments. Little or no evidence is offered in support of these statements, for the candidate who has been rejected always considers that every one concerned except himself is in fault. He is slow to recognise that incomplete preparation in one or other branch of study has handicapped him in the race with his fellows, and that those who have passed are his superiors in knowledge. All that he and his friends can urge is that a particular examination was more difficult than the preceding ones; and that if it was according to the authorised standards, the latter should be forthwith lowered. Objections of this kind can readily be answered by the examiners themselves who have gauged the abilities of the students, but they are clearly not called upon to justify their action on each and every occasion. The public generally have confidence in their impartiality, and the governing bodies of the various universities are equally satisfied with the soundness of their judgment. The views held on this subject by the Senate of the Calcutta University were expounded by the Vice-Chancellor at a recent convocation. Mr. Justice Banerji remarked that until very recently the percentage of failures at the examinations used to range from 40 to 60, which corresponded with that at the London University; but in last year's Arts examinations the percentage at the Entrance rose to 70, and it was higher at all the others. The result was "a good deal of thoughtful criticism and sensible suggestion, and also a mass of thoughtless talk and senseless abuse." Inquiry showed that the principals of the preparatory institutions were ready to admit that the candidates found fit to pass in their judgment were not much larger in number than those who actually did pass. This is conclusive proof that the examinations were not unfairly conducted, and that those who deserved success achieved it. To declare that the standards are too high is to invite dangerous innovations which might imperil the credit of university diplomas all over the country. In Calcutta, at any rate, the tendency is to raise the standard in the higher examinations, and the Senate are strong in their opinion that this is desirable in the true interests of education. The fact seems to be the preparatory schools and colleges are swamped with students, and that the teaching power is not equal to coping with the demands made upon it.

BENGAL.

(Feb. 25.)

THE Viceroy attended the annual conversazione of the Mahomedan Literary Society at the Town Hall on the 17th inst.

AN East Indian Railway Committee has been formed in Calcutta, consisting of Mr. Robertson, chief engineer of the line, Mr. M. St. L. Carter, Traffic Manager, and Mr. J. Douglas, Examiner of Accounts, to make inquiries and recommendations with regard to the Company's expenditure.

MR. SPENCER made another balloon ascent at Calcutta on Saturday. He was accompanied by Mr. Niven, manager of the Gas Company, Mr. H. Chowdri, Professor of Physics, and Mr. Kapp, photographer. Several photos were taken, and scientific meteorological researches made by Messrs. Niven and Chowdri. The balloon was up about one hour.

On the 17th inst. a tragedy took place on board the emigrant ship Ganges, bound to Calcutta from Demerara. Whilst she was in Saugor Roads the chief compounder murdered his assistant by stabbing him when asleep, and then committed suicide by taking a dose of poison.

THE Maharajah of Travancore left Benares for Gya on the 18th inst. He goes to Patna for one day, leaving for Calcutta on the evening of the 21st. He remains there six days, then visits Lucknow, Ajodhia, and Delhi. During his stay at Benares his Highness was the guest of the Maharajah of Vizianagram. Before leaving he gave a donation of Rs. 1,000 to the Aitchison Orphanage, founded in 1879 by Pandit Jaya Shankar, and maintained by subscriptions principally from Native Chiefs in the Punjab.

THE pleasure of the Maharajah of Kuch Behar's shooting party has been dissipated by a sad event in the death of Mr. Davies, the Superintendent of the Phulkhana or elephant stables, who died of heart disease in his bed on Tuesday night. The deceased was a man much respected in the camp and by those who knew him. As far as making bags goes, there has been no check to the success of the camp. Three tigers were killed on the 18th inst., and another on the 20th. Lady Florence Stratfield and Captain Brazier Creagh left the camp on Friday.

On the 19th inst. the Dum-Dum murder case came before Mr. Justice Norris at the Sessions, a special jury being empanelled. The two soldiers—Thomas O'Hara and William Bellow—were charged with murdering a Native named Sheikh Sulamon on Nov. 6. O'Hara is the man accused of firing the shot which killed the Native, Bellow standing by and making no attempt to stop him. The principal evidence is that of two other soldiers who turned Queen's evidence. One of them, named Gouldsbrough, gave evidence similar to that reported in the Magistrate's Court, from which it appeared that O'Hara pushed Sheikh Sulamon into a tank and then deliberately shot him. The case was concluded at Calcutta on the 21st inst. Bellow was acquitted, but O'Hara was sentenced to death. The jury deliberated for forty-five minutes, and were unanimous.

It is stated that an application will be made to the Calcutta High Court for revision of sentence in the case of the soldier, O'Hara, who was condemned to death for the murder of a Native at Dum-Dum. Considerable discussion is being carried on in the columns of the local papers on the case, arguments being advanced against implicit belief being placed in the testimony of the informer, Gouldsbrough, while it is also urged there was no intention to kill on the part of the man, whoever he might have been, who fired the shot.

HIS HIGHNESS THE NAWAB OF TONK is, states the Englishman, building a hospital, which will be specially adapted for pardanashin women, at a cost of some ten thousand rupees. It will be called the "Walter Hospital," after Colonel Walter, the Agent to the Governor-General, who lately laid the foundation-stone, and a lady doctor under the Countess of Dufferin Fund will probably be engaged by the State. The Nawab made a long and interesting speech on the occasion of the laying of the foundation-stone, in which he strongly advocated the adoption of Lady Dufferin's scheme by Native States. The Kotah Durbar has also, we learn, recently applied for the services of a lady doctor.

BOMBAY.

(Feb. 28.)

THE Bank of Bombay on Monday raised its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to 12 per cent.

THE REV. A. G. CANE, M.A., Chaplain of Satara, has been granted furlough to Europe for two years, from March 25.

CAPTAIN W. P. WALSHE has been invited to stand for one of the four seats on the Standing Committee of the Corporation which are about to be vacated in rotation in April next.

MR. ABBAS BEG, B.A., a judge in H.H. the Nawab of Junjeera's State, has been appointed by his Excellency the Governor in Council a statutory civil servant for this Presidency.

KHAN BAHADUR M. C. MURZBAN is the only candidate for the post of the President of the Municipal Corporation for the ensuing year, Dr. Cowasjee and Mr. Javerilal having withdrawn themselves from the field.

On the 20th inst. the Right Hon. Mr. Charles H. Childers, M.P., accompanied by Mrs. Childers, who have been on a tour to Calcutta and other places in India, returned to Bombay. via the Rajputana Malwa line, arrived in Grant-road at 11 A.M. They immediately left in a Government House carriage and pair, and drove to Government House, Malabar Point. Later in the day they started for Hyderabad. During their brief sojourn at Hyderabad they will be the guests of H.H. the Nizam.

The resignation by the Hon. Mr. McHinch of the Presidency of the Kurrachee Municipality is, says the Sind Gazette, a matter of general regret, not only to the Municipality itself but to the community at large, to whom the wise and prudent conduct of civic affairs has been a subject of general satisfaction since Mr. McHinch took office.

MADRAS.

LORD CONNEMARA had a return of Ganjam fever on Wednesday last, and was unable on that account to attend the meeting of Council in the Fort. He had recovered on Thursday, and proposed to move from Guindy to Government House, Mount Road.

ONE MR. W. D. Hart, who styles himself as an American traveller, and who has some acquaintance with the Bombay Police Courts, was sentenced on the 19th inst. to pay a fine of Rs. 100 for selling indecent photographs. The accused said he had sold the same in other countries, and no objection was taken; he therefore sold them in Madras. The photographs found in his possession were ordered to be destroyed.

SIR OLIVER ST JOHN has returned to Bangalore from a lengthened tour in the coffee districts of Mysore and Coorg. The number of European planters in the former state is very large, and is rapidly increasing. Occupying as they do the anomalous position of a considerable English community in a remote part of a Native State, they are deserving of the particular care of the Resident. The Pioneer is glad to hear that the government of his Highness the Maharaja has proved worthy of the trust reposed in it at the rendition, and that the planters have no more to complain of than they would if they lived under British rule. In one respect indeed they are more fortunate, for the system of roads throughout Mysore is nearer perfection than anything in British India—a marked contrast to Coorg, where the communications are detestable.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE Delhi-Kalka Railway Company are prepared to make a hill line to Simla; the gauge will be 2ft. 6in., and the steepest gradient 1 in 25. The cost is estimated at 55 lakhs.

MAJOR ECCLES, of the Rifle Brigade, died from typhoid fever on Friday last at Bareilly. The deceased officer was very popular, and commanded the universal respect and esteem of all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was devoted to his service and his professions. He was also an ardent sportsman, and his familiar form will often be missed from the cricket field.

A MEERUT telegram reports that small-pox is rather on the increase there than otherwise, and the doctors are pushing on vaccination measures rapidly. The want of rain is sorely felt; the crops are stunted nearly everywhere, and the westerly breeze that has been blowing of late is drying them up. The residents in the city are almost in a state of panic owing to the numerous robberies and attempts at robbery that have taken place lately.

LORD DUNLO has left Calcutta on a visit to Benares and the North-West Provinces. From thence he will proceed to Bombay en route to Australia.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—Indian Gold Mining Shares on Saturday were a little dull, but the only change worth mentioning was a relapse of 1-16 in those of the Mysore Company. Mysore Shares were last quoted 6½ to 6 7-16 xd., Nundydroog 2 1-16 to 2 3-16, Indian Consolidated 2s. 6d. to 3s., Balaghat-Mysore fully paid (£1) 11s. to 12s., Ooregum Ordinary 2½ to 2½, ditto Preference 2½ to 2½, Devala-Moyar 3s. 3d. to 3s. 9d., Nine Reefs New (17s. paid) 7s. 6d. to 8s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 12s. to 12s. 6d., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., South-East Mysore 2s. to 2s. 6d., Indian Glenrock 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., Gold Fields of Mysore 16s. 6d. to 17s. 6d., New South-East Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 13.

INDIAN COUNCILS BILL.

On the motion to go into Committee on this Bill,

LORD HEESCHELL said he desired to call attention to the omission from the Bill of a provision which was in the Bill as it received the approval of the Government of India. The object of this section was to relieve the local councils from the operation of a clause in the Act of 1861, which prevented those councils from repealing, amending, or in any way interfering with any legislation of the Central Council prior to the passing of the Act or to the formation of any councils subsequently established. In this way the provincial councils since formed were fettered by limitations which did not apply in the case of the Council of Bombay, because it had existed longer than the others. For example, the council for the North-West Provinces could not deal with such matters of local regulation as the straying and trespassing of cattle. Little advantage would be gained by increasing the number of members of the councils if their power was to be restricted in matters which came within their legitimate function. It was in the highest degree expedient that the councils should be induced to take up as much local work as possible; and he therefore appealed to the Government to consider whether the omitted clause might not be reinserted.

Viscount CROSS said the clause referred to was in the original Bill, but he thought it desirable to communicate with the Viceroy and his Council with reference to it, and the result of the correspondence was that he would assent to the reinsertion of the clause. The more he considered the matter the more he was convinced that it would be wise to set up councils in other parts of India, with a view to further decentralization; and having that opinion, he thought it necessary to communicate with the Viceroy before finally approving a clause which would apply to councils existing and to those that might hereafter be formed.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said he was glad to hear what the Secretary of State said as to the formation of councils for other parts of India.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill.

On Clause 1,

The Earl of NORTHBROOK recapitulated what had been said on the second reading as to the expediency and possibility of enabling representative public bodies to recommend persons to be nominated members of the central and provincial councils. Whilst guarding himself against the expression of any opinion as to the representation of the interests of separate classes by such recommendations, and recognising that the representation of the ryots and cultivators of the soil must still be provided for mainly by the members of the Government, he proposed the following addition to the clause as a means of giving effect to the opinions expressed in the second reading debate:—

“Provided that the Governor-General in Council may from time to time, with the approval of the Secretary of State in Council, make regulations as to the conditions under which such nominations, or any of them, shall be made by the Governor-General, Governors, and Lieutenant-Governors respectively, and prescribe the manner in which such regulations shall be carried into effect.”

Viscount CROSS said the noble earl's recapitulation of what had passed on a former occasion absolved him from explaining his acceptance of the amendment. It had always been his intention, if the Bill became law, to follow the example of Sir Charles Wood and to send with the Act a despatch pointing out that it was important that members of the councils should be selected, not only with a view to their giving the best advice, but also with some regard to obtaining some kind of representation of the people. The noble earl had said it was possible there might be legal difficulty in carrying out the idea unless there was something in the Act to show how it could be done, but nothing was further from his mind than to leave the legal difficulty open, and he had not the slightest objection to the insertion of words in the Bill to indicate what was intended. A further advantage would result from the insertion of such words, and it was that they would give some satisfaction to the people of India—a point that was not always thought of. Besides, it was better they should be in the Act than that they should be merely embodied in a despatch by the Secretary of State, who was liable to be changed at any time.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said he was glad the amendment was accepted by the Secretary of State, and it gave him the greater satisfaction because it was a step towards the adoption of the elective principle, and it was essential in India that there should be a thorough representation of minorities. He trusted that the members to be nominated under this clause would prove to be valuable additions to the councils.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause, as amended, was added to the Bill.

On Clause 2,

Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY moved the following addition to the clause:—

"Provided also that rules made under this Act shall not prohibit questions being asked relating to complaints respecting alleged acts of maladministration within British territory."

Viscount Cross said that if the amendment were passed it would not limit the discretion of the members of the Government to decline to give any answers that might be injurious to the public service.

The amendment was withdrawn; and the clause was agreed to.

On the motion of Lord HERSCHELL, a clause was inserted after Clause 4 to empower the provincial councils, with the sanction of the Governor-General, to deal with local matters, notwithstanding the Act of 1861.

The remaining clauses were agreed to, and the Bill passed through Committee.

DINNER TO MR. H. S. KING, M.P.

A large number of guests were on Friday night entertained at dinner at the Hôtel Métropole by Sir Roper Lethbridge, M.P., and the European members of the Uncovenanted Service and the Civil Engineers of India to meet Mr. Henry S. King, M.P., and other distinguished friends of the service. The company numbered about 200, and included Lord Teynham, Sir Whitaker Ellis, M.P., Mr. J. G. Swift M'Neill, M.P., Mr. Hugh Watt, M.P., Mr. J. Seymour Keay, M.P., Mr. George Howell, M.P., Mr. H. S. Kimber, M.P., Mr. E. Brodie Hoare, M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Mr. Cremer, M.P., Colonel E. T. Gourley, M.P., Mr. T. Sutherland, M.P., Colonel E. Hill, C.B., M.P., Mr. Justin McCarthy, M.P., Sir Guyer Hunter, M.P., General Sir Lewis Pelly, M.P., Sir John Coode, Sir George B. Bruce, Sir Henry Mance, Sir Theodore Hope, Sir W. W. Hunter, Sir Guildford Molesworth, Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke, Major-General Merriman, Colonel A. M. Brookfield, Captain Stiffe, Captain J. R. Parkinson, Messrs. W. H. Preece, J. Cowasji Jehangir, S. Digby, G. Yule, W. Digby, J. H. Matthews, S. P. Low, J. L. Tickell, Dr. S. Kapadia, J. W. Chisholm, J. H. Hart, J. P. Davidson, Edward Jenkins, A. Binnie, H. A. Greig, G. O'Donnell, J. N. Banerji, &c. Lord Aberdare wrote, regretting his inability to attend, and added: "Your case seems to me a very strong one, and the excuse which sometimes justifies delay—viz., adverse finances—cannot be pleaded here. I trust so good a cause will not want powerful and persistent advocates." A telegram was also read from the Irish brethren of Uncovenanted Civil Service.—The toast of "The Queen-Empress" was received with enthusiasm.—Mr. Edward Jenkins (vice-chairman) proposed "The Houses of Parliament," coupled with the names of Lord Teynham, Sir W. Guyer Hunter, Mr. T. Sutherland, and Mr. Swift M'Neill, who responded.—Mr. H. S. King, M.P., proposed "The Cause." He said that after a long and painful process he had mastered the various grievances of the gentlemen represented that night, and how to get a remedy, and the result of this study was that he had become convinced of the existence of real and legitimate cause of complaint. They were, however, difficult, and in many respects serious problems to solve. In India there was universal sympathy with their cause, and among the Military and Covenanted Services there was a widespread feeling that the hardships under which they laboured should be speedily removed. They all agreed that the Uncovenanted Servants were suffering grievous wrong, and it was thoroughly recognised by the Government of India that they should receive more just and generous treatment; if not, incalculable mischief would be done to Indian administration by the festering discontent of 1,500 European servants in India—(cheers). The Chairman, in response, said that he had received the following letter from Sir John Gorst, Under Secretary for India:—"My dear Lethbridge, Lord Cross wishes me to tell you that, having regard for the many representations which have been made to him by Members of Parliament, that it would be satisfactory to them if the alleged grievance of the Uncovenanted Civil Servants were inquired into by a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and to repeated suggestions from the Government of India that an investigation of this kind should take place—it is the intention of the Government to move for such a Committee after Easter. I presume that under these circumstances you will not think it necessary to proceed with your motion on the 25th."—(cheers). He (the chairman) had replied that Lord Cross's decision would be received with the utmost gratification not only by the civil servants concerned, but also by a large number of Members of Parliament on both sides of the House, and by many others interested in the welfare of our Indian Empire. On their behalf he expressed their warm sense of the courtesy and consideration accorded to their representations by Lord Cross, Sir J. Gorst, and the Government in general, and of the fairness shown in submitting these representations, with all the facts, to the impartial tribunal of a Select Committee of the House of Commons. Of course he should at once withdraw his notice of motion—(cheers). The decision of the Government would necessitate a change of tactics, and he regarded the battle as nearly won.—Sir J. Coode gave "The Civil and Military Services of India," which was acknowledged by Sir W. W. Hunter, Sir Andrew Clarke, and Sir Lewis Pelly.—"The Guests" was proposed by Mr. A. B. Binnie, and replied to by Mr. Justin McCarthy, M.P., Sir G. B. Bruce, Mr. S. P. Low, and Mr. J. Cowasji Jehangir. The toast of "The Chairman," by Mr. George O'Donnell, concluded the list.

OBITUARY.

MAJOR-GENERAL A. MACKENZIE, C.B., lieut.-colonel on retired full pay, late 78th Highlanders, died at The Manse, Avoch, on the 5th inst. General Mackenzie joined the Army February 7th, 1840; became lieutenant, April 8th, 1842; captain, March 15th, 1853; major, July 20th, 1858; lieut.-colonel, July 13th, 1867; colonel, July 13th, 1872; and retired upon full pay, with the hon. rank of major-general, March 27th, 1873. He served with the 78th Highlanders in the Persian War in 1857, including the expedition to Borazjoon, the night attack and battle of Kooshab, and bombardment of Mohumrah, receiving the medal with clasp. He served in Bengal with Havelock's column from its first taking the field in July, 1857, including the actions of Futteh-pore, Pandoo Nuddee, Cawnpore, Onao, Buseerut Gunge (in command of the regiment on August 5th), and Bithoor (severely wounded). He took part with Grant's column in the attack on the Alumbagh (severely wounded, and horse killed); with Ontram's force at the Alumbagh, and was in command of the left advance post with 150 men and four guns during the last attack on March 16th, 1858 (mentioned in despatches); and also in the operations ending in the final capture of Lucknow. He served in the Rohilkund Campaign in 1858, and was present at the capture of Bareilly (medal with two clasps, brevet of major, and a years' service for Lucknow).

MAJOR-GENERAL J. B. BELLASIS, on the Retired List of the Indian Army, died on the 11th inst. at his residence at New Brighton, Cheshire, aged seventy-three years.

MAJOR-GENERAL H. W. HITCHINS, colonel on the Retired List, late Royal (Madras) Engineers, died at East Lodge, Brighton, on the 9th inst., aged sixty-seven years.

COLONEL J. E. WETHERALL, on the Retired List, late Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, died at Rodney House, Clevedon, on the 6th inst., aged fifty-one years. He joined the 3rd Madras European Fusiliers as ensign, Sept. 10th, 1856; became lieutenant, Dec. 11th, 1857; was transferred to the 108th Foot on its formation—was adjutant from Oct. 15th, 1866, to Sept. 3, 1867—became captain, Sept. 4th, 1867; major, July 1st, 1881; lieutenant-colonel, May 9th, 1883; colonel, May 9th, 1887; and retired last month on the pension of his rank. He was adjutant Deolali Depot, Sept. 1st, 1870, to Oct. 4th, 1875; and of Auxiliary Forces from Dec. 21st, 1877, to Dec. 21st, 1882. He served in the Indian Mutiny of 1858-59—battle of Banda (medal with clasp).

LIEUT.-COLONEL G. M. D. HILL, Bengal Infantry, late 20th Punjab Infantry, died at Dehra on Jan. 30th. He was the eldest son of the late Lieut.-General G. M. Hill, Bengal S.C., and entered the Indian Army in 1862. He served in the Abyssinian Expedition (medal), the Hazara Campaign of 1868, including operation of the Black Mountain (medal and clasp), the Jowaki Expedition in 1877-78 (clasp), the Afghan War of 1879-80 with the Kuram Force, including capture of Ali Musjid (medal and clasp), the Mahsood Wuzeree Expedition of 1881, and the Egyptian Expedition of 1882 (medal and star).

MAJOR T. S. BURT, F.R.S., late H.E.I.C.'s Engineers, died at Cotmandene, Dorking, on the 8th inst., aged 84 years.

CAPTAIN R. D. ANSTRUTHER, late 106th Foot, Governor of Pentonville Prison, died on the 9th inst. He had been out of health for some months, and on Sunday he had an apoplectic seizure, from which he never rallied. Captain Anstruther served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign, and was present at the capture of Tantia Topce. He retired from the Army about fifteen years ago, and served under the Home Office in Her Majesty's Prison Department at Perth, Manchester, and latterly as Governor of Pentonville.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT will visit the Umaria and Warora coalfields in April, thence proceeding to Bombay, probably going over the Kattywar Railway system.

SOME VERY HUMBLE CITIZENS.

THE LOAFER.

(Correspondent of the Times of India.)

"Sir, can you let me have four annas to buy bread with?"

I turned round. A haggard, dissipated-looking man was at my side, and from his manner of dress and general appearance I knew he was a "loafer." He had on a battered pith hat that a sweeper would have scorned to wear, a pair of shoes which he tied up with pieces of twine to keep on his feet, a dirty white coat with three buttons missing, and the remnants of a pair of tweed trousers. To those in India who know what the term "loafer" means it is quite sufficient to say that the man was one, when I wish to convey what he was. To those who have not been in this country, and who do not know what it means, I am afraid that I cannot quite explain. At Home when a man has spent his last penny, is turned out of his lodgings, and is utterly destitute, he becomes a tramp, if he is a quiet man, and is arrested. If he is not a quiet man he breaks open a house or does something desperate, and is arrested just the same. There is no doubt the tramps are not good people to have in a country; still there are some people who pity them, even if they do not help them. In India, when a man becomes a loafer he sinks to the lowest level that any one in that country can possibly sink to. Out here, never mind how poor a European he receives a certain amount of respect from even respectable Natives; but a loafer is despised by the lowest class of Natives. A Mahomedan budmash will slap a European loafer familiarly on the back, and when addressing him will make use of the term which ought properly to convey the idea that the persons talking are nearly related, but which does not. If anything can, that ought to convey the utter degradation of the loafer.

I looked at the loafer who addressed me and recognised him. He was not a loafer when I first knew him. Drink made him one. What made him drink concerns no one. He began drinking heavily with liquor whisky, went on with cheap brandy, and ended with country liquor. Some of his friends tried to stop him in the first two stages; but when they found he imbibed the evil-smelling stuff of the grog-shops they discontinued their efforts, for when a European arrives at that stage nothing can save him. He was a brilliant man before he took to drink, and would have made a name for himself—so Government gave him a compassionate allowance which was just sufficient to allow him to get blind drunk for eight days in a month, without leaving him any money for food after it.

When I turned round he recognised me too, and started: he then began to shamble away as hastily as he could. I went after him, and stopped him by putting my hand on his arm, and he wept; we were near a small bridge at the time, and he sat on the parapet wall and sobbed spasmodically, and placed his right hand over his eyes.

"I am very sorry," I began.

"Stop, for God's sake," he cried, "anything but that. I want nothing from you, leave me alone."

I soothed him as gently as I could, and at last got him to listen to me.

"What can I do for you?" I said.

"Buy me a loaf of bread; buy it for me, don't give me the money."

I understood, and was going away to a baker's shop near by, when he touched my arm. "I will take that bread," he said, "if you promise to take back the money when I receive my allowance."

I nodded.

He greedily took the bread and ate it without breaking the loaf, exactly as I have seen a wolf tearing a little Native child near a hut on a gramfield in Central India.

"Come to me on the first of next month and take the money," he said; "promise me," and I promised.

I could not go on the first, but I went on the second to the address he gave me. He lived in a room of a Native chawl. A tin lamp, a charpoy, and an old great coat constituted the furniture.

I saw the loafer sitting on the edge of the miserable little deal cot with coir ropes. On the ground before him was a bottle of country liquor, and a broken teacup, and in a corner of the room sat the boy attendant of the grog-shop waiting to replenish the bottle when emptied. The loafer's eyes were blood-shot and his face was bloated, and I knew he had been drinking. He looked at me dully and feebly, and recognised me with an effort.

"Sit down and make yourself comfortable," he said with a laugh that was not good to hear, as he made room for me by his side. He said nothing for some time, but took three or four glasses of liquor in quick succession. He then said: "I know I am going to die soon, and this is how I know it. When I first took to drinking I used to have visions, grand visions. Gradually the liquor used to make me dull and sodden, I felt. Last night when I went to bed drunk I had a vision for the first time for many years. I dreamt I was dead. My spirit hovered round the body till the Municipality took it away, and buried it; and then the spirit went into the body, and we were both taken far away up into the sky. We landed on a planet much like this one, only infinitely more beautiful and larger, and went into a magnificent place like an enormous Cathedral where some Celestial Beings came up to me and one of them said, 'that is a ruined life.' Another Being, addressing the first, said: 'Shall I take him away,' and he said, 'Yes,' and this spirit took me kindly by the arm and led me away to a very, very large building that seemed to be a building, and yet was not, except that it had rooms, but it had no roof on it. My conductor took me to one room where a sad-eyed man was sitting. His head was on his arms, but when he raised his head he looked pityingly on me; and my conductor said 'let him take a hair from your head,' and the sad-eyed man took a hair from my head, and began to weave it into a mat composed of golden, brown, and black hair, and as he did so he wept, and I wept too, and a great repentance came over me, such as no man knows in this world. It gnawed my heart, and I could have dashed my brains out; but I found that I was immortal, and nothing hurt me, but my great regret, a regret which used to come over me like that here when I used to wish to tear my flesh off; but I got drunk, and it passed away. There it would not pass, but grew stronger, and the sad-eyed man looked pityingly on me, and told me it was my punishment. And around me I saw murderers, and liars, and hypocrites all undergoing their punishment. I marvelled greatly when I saw some whom I had known in this world being punished for what no one thought them guilty of. My conductor said that bad men were as much ashamed of showing their goodness as good men were ashamed of showing their badness, and I understood."

A dreamy expression was in the loafer's eyes as he spoke, but he now roused himself from his reverie, and feverishly helped himself to more liquor. He then continued excitedly: "And I saw a man and woman undergoing torment, and I pointed to them and said 'give me revenge,' and my conductor said 'You are revenged. The Ruiners of Men undergo extreme torment.'"

The loafer's eyes blazed, and he worked his hands as though tearing out a man's heart, and I knew then that the loafer had delirium tremens.

And the loafer died, and the Municipality buried him, and everyone said it was a good job too. He was only a drunken beast and a disgrace to his country; but these people did not know his previous history.

The man I have described may be regarded as an amateur rather than a professional loafer. Men like him "loaf" only when they have drunk all their money, but the professional man never has any money except what he gets by begging, and never has a roof to shelter him. I know four splendid specimens of this class, who always hunt in company. Their mode of procedure is very simple. They hang about the streets till they see any one, whom they imagine to be a likely person. Three of the band then lean up against a wall, or sit across a gutter, or on the ground, and smoke biddies, while the fourth accosts the "likely" person, and tells him that he has a starving wife and children, whereat a faint flicker of a smile lights up the faces of the smokers. If he gets any money, the four adjourn to the nearest grog shop and drink. If they get no money they go on hanging about till they do, and smoke more biddies and sit across more gutters. At night they sleep in "dharamsalas" and on benches in the public gardens; or if they have any money they gamble with Mahomedan "loochas." When the monsoons come on, they give themselves up to the police and go to the Government workhouse.

I gave one of them a coat once and some tobacco, and an old wooden pipe, and he appeared to be melted, and said:—"I wish to goodness I could set to work. I would then earn money, and could buy any amount of tobacco and brandy, have a place to sleep in at night; but believe me I cannot do it, although I have tried. I am not lazy, because at present I work harder and tell more lies for four annas than you do for your month's pay." This was not complimentary, but it was true. He further stated that he had this overpowering inclination to "loaf" when a child, and when at school he always played truant. I suppose all this was meant as an excuse for his mode of life, and perhaps the man was as little to blame for this as the man who shows symptoms of lunacy inherited from his father. W.

THE annual meeting of the General Family Pension Fund was held in Calcutta on Friday last, Mr. H. A. Remfry, presiding. He stated that the funds invested had increased to 18½ lakhs, Rs. 1,46,000 having been added during the year. A resolution was passed, making an abatement of 30 per cent. on subscriptions of twenty years' standing, and Messrs. Remfry and Rushton were re-elected directors.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.—IV.

IN recurring to this subject we can do so with the conviction that the moral of our argument has, during the last month or two, been seriously enforced by the excessive "shrinkage"—amounting in the aggregate to millions sterling—that has made itself felt by those holding Transvaal or South African stocks, debentures amongst the South American Republics, or even in the less speculative railway and other trusts in the United States. We are quite aware that only a small proportion of these now suffering holders in the funds and stocks of foreign and non-British States could, even with the fullest light, be expected to place capital in India. But we are not ambitious in looking for any sudden or large response to the advice that we offer purely on public grounds. If only ten, nay, peradventure, five per cent. of the present investors in alien States and outlandish stocks were to turn their attention to the field of investment in British India—and for that matter some of the Native States also—the effect even on the wide commercial interests of that empire would be appreciable, while the results to individuals, as compared with those poor risky "omnibus" ventures through City channels, would be safe, steady, and substantial.

To come to closer quarters; the tangible basis of our comparison must lie between the average and ordinary return in floating capital in this country, and that which is, or may be, yielded by judicious selection of Indian investments. It is quite safe to assert as a general proposition—especially since Consols have been Goschenised—that capital in India is worth twice as much as it is here. An illustration of this is afforded by what has been witnessed in the City during the last few weeks, and the concurrent, though by no means consequent movements in the Indian money-market. It was regarded as quite an extraordinary circumstance when the Bank rate here was put up to six and seven per cent for a week or two; but the Bank of Bengal's rate was ten per cent. in the first half of February, and that of the Bombay Bank was eleven, and touched twelve. This, be it noted, was for loans on the direct security of Government of India stock; and there is a further comparison which emphasises the advantage to capital in India. Those bank rates in India might be regarded as the minimum, but the Bank rate here was the maximum—that is, while borrowers in India in the open market, that is, "in the bazaar," would have to give more than at the banks, there were always here lenders only too glad to take 1 or 2 per cent. under the Bank rate; and, as our readers know, this outside competition of lenders speedily brought down the Bank charges to the normal 3 or 4 per cent. We are aware that this department of the market for floating capital, the money market proper, does not so much affect the class of private investors whose interests we have mainly in view; but it forms the basis, the starting point of the general field for the employment of surplus funds and private savings in India. And when similar comparison is followed up into the wider field of mercantile enterprise and joint-stock undertakings, or between those that have the United Kingdom as their domicile, and those of British India, the difference in favour of the latter is even greater in proportion.

It is true we must, in this matter, avoid exaggerations such as that indulged in the other day by Mr. Samuel Smith as champion of the Lancashire cotton manufacturers, when he rose in his place to denounce the new heresy of the "eight hours day." The honourable member, in his eagerness to show how great the rate of profit is in India as compared with this country, declared that "there are several mills in that country which pay a dividend of 30 and 40 per cent., while the average rate of profits of mills in Lancashire is not more than 3 per cent." The worthy, and usually philanthropic member for Flintshire could not have been taken seriously on this occasion, or there would have been cries of "Name, name," from some of the "bloated capitalists" around him eager to have a hand in these "several mills" yielding dividends which transcend those of the glorified breweries of our day. Probably that mention of averages as applied to the Lancashire factories suggested that a similar test applied to Indian undertakings would make havoc of the thirty to forty per cent. screwed out, as Mr. Smith asserted, of the quarter paid "hands" and their eighty hours per week. Here, in passing, we may remark that these assertions as to the zulum practised on the Indian cotton operative are as much exaggerated as the citation of abnormal dividends paid by "several mills" in India. For our sober business object we are quite willing to abide the test of averages; though we hope to show that it is open to our clients to make selection of the better-paying concerns, and avoid risky or decaying undertakings. As cotton mills have been mentioned, let us look at them first. In Bengal and the North West Provinces, where spinning and weaving are carried on under disadvantage as compared with Bombay, we note several instances where the dividends, as reported in the ordinary price lists, range from five to ten per cent. Then there is in the market price of the stock a margin for the English investor, as the shares of the five per cent. concerns can be obtained at much under par, thereby at once affording allowance for cost of remitting the dividends home. On this substantial part of our argument—the favourable rate of the stocks—we shall have more to say afterwards. As to jute presses and mills, also other concerns more directly connected with Bengal trade, there are several that pay from 6 to 12 per cent., or which, because of the low market value of the stocks, afford an equivalent or greater return. With regard to the more special field for investments, on the Bengal side, the great tea-planting industry, there is more variety, both as to the dividends and prices of stock, thereby affording more scope as to selection. There are several of which the dividends range from six and seven to ten and more per cent., and a few have paid from fifteen to twenty. With the older established, such as the original Assam, the £20 shares of which stand at Rs. 600, the high market price proves their solid value. It will be said these high local prices of stocks will deter English investors; but our preliminary reply to this—which we shall amplify later on—is that there are times, seasons, and methods whereby the vigilant investor can get in at rates under the usual market figures.

Coming to the Bombay side, where the cotton mill industry is well established, and where it is rapidly emancipating itself from the agents' commission and other abuses, there is ample field for selection, and substantial ground for advancing values in well-selected investments. The first in the list, the Ahmedabad, shows a half-yearly dividend of nine per cent., the price of the Rs. 1,000 shares being quoted at Rs. 1,300. Then the Alfred (Broach) gives a half-year's dividend of fifteen per cent.; and the Rs. 500 shares can be bought under that figure—which leaves a wide margin of return. The well-managed Central India paid last half-year Rs. 55 on its Rs. 500 shares; but these fetch Rs. 800, indicating, no doubt, some solid reserved fund. The well-known Empress, established and managed by Lancashire men, paid ten per cent., and its Rs. 500 shares are over Rs. 600; but this does not take account of the considerable bonuses received by the original shareholders in the repeated issues of additional shares at par. On the other hand, in the case of several mills in Western India, such as the Hyderabad, the Kandeish, and the Bellary, which pay dividends of from five to eight per cent., their Rs. 1,000 shares can be bought from Rs. 500 to Rs. 700, thus offering a good margin for new investors. The Madras United, managed by Bombay men, has paid dividends at the rate of twenty per cent., but its Rs. 1,000 shares stand at nearly Rs. 2,000; though vigilant purchasers can at certain seasons obtain them at much less, as in many other similar cases of high-priced stocks. Besides the Anglo-Indian Banks—the position of which is sufficiently well-known here—there are numerous miscellaneous undertakings in India that invite English purchasers, either because of the favourable dividends they yield—from six to twelve per cent. and upwards—or by reason of the discount at which their stocks can frequently be obtained. Amongst these are the brewery concerns in northern India, general stores such as the Komp and Treacher companies in Bombay, the Gillon of Lahore, Scott-Thomson of Calcutta, and some of the coal and steam navigation companies; also such prosperous concerns as Thacker's bookselling and scientific instrument store in Bombay, and in the same city the Oriental Life Office, and the Loan Company of the same title. Possibly we may return to this branch of the subject, though it is not needful, or even desirable, to go too much into detail in this series of articles. We must not omit to mention the debentures of several companies, of which, on the Calcutta side, there is generally a good assortment to choose from—the fixed rate of interest ranging from 6 to 8 per cent., the stocks being obtainable at par, or little over. There remain the objections and difficulties to be considered—the bugbear of exchange, and the methods of selection and purchase. These we shall try to deal with in some future issue.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A CLASS of officers and men of the Bikanir Camel Corps is to undergo a course of training with the 19th Bombay Infantry.

SEVERAL of the minor Afghan chiefs have determined to copy the uniforms of our Native Army for themselves and their regular troops.

THE rumour that there is to be a change of places between General Perkins and General White when the former comes into his division—General Perkins going to Quetta and General White coming down to Lucknow—has become so general that it is worth while saying positively that it has no foundation.

EVERY preparation is being made at Rawalpindi to equip the first Army Corps by the end of March. The Rawalpindi Arsenal Department has received strict orders to secure an extensive stock of tents, &c.

THE Presidency Volunteers have been inspected by General Auchinleck. He expressed satisfaction at the way the corps had recently garrisoned Fort William. Lieutenant Spooner was presented with a medal as the best shot in the Presidency.

COLONEL ANDERSON, Secretary of the Mobilisation Committee, arrived at Rawalpindi on the 18th Feb., and left for Umballa the following evening. Colonel Anderson was detained in Peshawar for over a fortnight through illness, but is now in a fair way to recovery.

THE experience in garrison duties which the Calcutta Volunteers have just gone through is of a kind, says the Pioneer, which we should like to see gained by every large volunteer corps in the country. They were given charge of Fort William for several days, engaged for the moment in manoeuvres on the Hughli, and had to discharge all the various duties usually fulfilled by the regular troops. The latter were absent, engaged in mimic warfare on the Hughli, and a high compliment was paid to the volunteers in thus entrusting them with the guarding of the fort. The great defect in the training of the only European Reserve which exists in India is that the men are seldom exercised in the work which would really fall to them were their services required in case of emergency. They are taught to shoot well and to drill in such a manner as will fit them to take part in a march-past; but they are seldom put through a course of outpost duty, or told off to garrison the positions which would probably be assigned to them in time of internal disturbance. And yet great opportunities offer for making their instruction practical in every way. In the railway corps, for instance, detachments might from time to time be sent to hold bridge-heads, to occupy defensive positions in or about stations, or to improvise entrenchments. These railway battalions contain a leaven of old soldiers, who have learned their work in the regular army, and who would know in a measure what was required of them. If their interest were excited in this special kind of training, they could set a good example to their fellows, and in course of time along all the great railways each man would realise what his value was as a fighting unit. In the large towns, where there are corps numbering several hundred men, the volunteers should be taught their duties on similar lines, particular attention being paid to mustering at certain fixed points in case of alarm. Troops of Light Horse should know the country thoroughly for several miles around their headquarters, a point upon which General Auchinleck laid great stress when inspecting the Calcutta troops the other day. All this has doubtless been insisted upon again and again by military experts who have interested themselves in Indian volunteering; but the fact remains that, except straight shooting and the simple elements of drill, both of the highest importance in their way, but little is done to carry out these ideas. Commandants and company officers can do a good deal to make the instruction of their men as practical as possible, but unless the co-operation of those holding responsible positions in the regular army is secured their efforts will scarcely be successful. The experiment just tried in Calcutta has been satisfactory in every way, and may well be quoted in support of the contention that Volunteers would appreciate any scheme under which their efficiency as practical soldiers would be increased.

THE night attack by the Calcutta Naval Volunteers on the Fulta defence works, guarding the Hughli at an important point, seems to have proved that the passage of a hostile fleet up the river would be next to impossible. The 9-inch guns are so trained that their fire in broad daylight would be most destructive to hostile vessels, which would probably seek to run the gauntlet under cover of darkness. But with the electric light the defenders can easily detect the approach to sweep the river with fire from their heavy artillery and machine guns. On the night of the 16th instant the Naval Volunteers realised how difficult of a task an enemy would have in forcing a passage. Granted that they escaped the shot and shell they had to steer their vessel exactly over the spots where submarine mines would be laid, and eventually they ran aground. Considering that among these Volunteers are pilots who have an intimate knowledge of the river it is evident that a strange flotilla could scarcely escape going aground if they succeeded in avoiding the mines. The navigation of the Hooghly is, in short, so difficult that if the buoys and landmarks were removed the most experienced pilot would find it almost impossible to thread his way through the dangerous channels. There need, therefore, be no apprehension that Calcutta will ever fall by a coup de main, let the enemy approaching from the sea be the most enterprising imaginable.

The MILITARY CAREER. A Guide to Young
Officers, Army Candidates, and Parents. By Lieut-
General Sir W. BELLAIRS, K.C.M.G., C.B.

"A practical handbook, which may help parents to answer the urgent question, what to do with their boys."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"There is a good deal of useful information combined with much sound advice in Sir W. Bellairs's book. . .
Parents will find in it how commissions are to be obtained, the examinations necessary to be passed and their scope, the cost of outfit, and the amount of private allowance that is advisable . . . and detailed statements of all the articles which are necessary for a complete but not extravagant outfit. . . The author's estimates are perfectly reasonable, and can be safely
followed."—BROAD ARROW.

"Sir William Bellairs has omitted nothing likely to be of service either to the young man himself or to his parents or guardians."—MORNING POST.

MODERN TACTICS. By Captain H. R. GALL
(late 5th Fusiliers).

"Captain Gall's book will be of great value to military students going up for examinations. His style is lucid and simple, and the questions which are appended to each section of the subject are very well chosen."—
ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

"The style is clear and simple, and the explanations, helped as they are by numerous plans, will no doubt be easily grasped by those for whom they are written."—
MORNING POST.

from 1746 to 1849 inclusive. By Colonel G. B.
MALLESON, C.S.I. With a Portrait of the Author,
a Map, and Three Plans.

"This work, which has already been before the public in a less condensed form, is the best text-book upon the subject of the conquest of India that we have perused, and may be safely commended to every student who wishes to acquire a full knowledge of that great historical fact from a writer who, in his own words, 'will tell the whole truth without respect of persons.'"—

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.
You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstance its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOL BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other distressing diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." ## ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 1890.

General Intelligence.

• [BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 7th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 5th March; and from Calcutta to the 4th March.

THE Forest Act Amendment Bill was passed on Feb. 28th, and the Charitable Endowments Bill was to be dealt with at the meeting of the Council on March 7th. All the legislative work of the Calcutta Session will be disposed of by the end of this month, the last meeting of the Council being held on the 28th.

As the Calcutta Session is so near its close a successor to the Maharaja of Vizianagram in the Legislative Council will not be appointed till next cold weather.

THE despatch by the Government of India on the Excise question, in which Mr. Caine's charges are completely refuted, appears in the last Gazette of India. The whole case has been most exhaustively treated. His statements on examination prove to be either wild exaggerations or pure fiction.

IF the Secretary of State approves the scheme of administrative reform in the N.W. Provinces as proposed by the Naini Tal Committee the question will be dealt with by the Government of India during the ensuing hot weather, since some legislation will be required in connection with it.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR'S party have been out pig-sticking near Jodhpur. Fifteen pigs were killed, the Prince getting four first spears. A fine boar charged the Prince, and got speared in the neck. The spear-head bent quite crooked, and has been kept as a souvenir.

THE Commander-in-Chief was to start on his deferred trip to Assam about the 15th instant, by which date the military estimates for the year will have been fully settled.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces leaves for Mussoorie on or about the 28th, and will shortly after start on his march through Gurhwal.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, accompanied by Sir J. Ware Edgar and Captain Currie, A.D.C., has left Calcutta for Chota Nagpur. His Honour will dispose personally of the appeals brought up by the Kols convicted by the local authorities of certain acts of lawlessness during the recent disputes with their zemindars. This will obviate the matter being carried to the High Court.

THE HON. Mr. J. B. RICHEY, C.S.I., member of the Bombay Council, has resigned the Civil Service.

THE Amir is reported to have expressed an intention, after his tour through the Herat and Kandahar districts, of visiting Chaman to see the railway works there.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL STEWART, commanding the Hyderabad Contingent, proceeds shortly on six months' leave to England.

JUSTICES TREVELYAN and Beverley, of the Calcutta High Court, have been granted leave from March 20th and April 11th, respectively, to Sept. 16th.

MR. WESTMACOTT, Excise Commissioner in Bengal, will shortly proceed on three months' leave, Mr. A. Forbes, Magistrate of the twenty-four Pergunnahs, acting for him. Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Patna Division, takes nine months' furlough, Mr. C. C. Stevens acting for him; while Mr. C. C. Quinn will officiate for Mr. Stevens as Commissioner of Bhagulpore.

MR. J. R. REID has been formally gazetted to the Board of Revenue in the N.W. Provinces from the date of Mr. J. C. Robertson's resignation of the service. Whether he will join the appointment is still uncertain.

MAJOR R. R. PULFORD, R.E., goes to Agra shortly to officiate for eight months as Superintending Engineer, in the place of Colonel F. D. Brown, V.C. Mr. L. B. Simeon, Executive Engineer in the Kumaon Division, acts for Major Pulford in the N.P.W. Public Works Secretariat.

MR. F. L. O'CALLAGHAN, Consulting Engineer for Railways, has returned to Calcutta, having completed his examination of the Mu Valley Railway route in Upper Burma.

MAJOR J. A. MILEY has been appointed Controller of Military Accounts, Eastern Circle, Bengal, vice Colonel Perrean, retired.

It has been decided to establish a Society for the Diffusion of Useful Literature in Western India.

MR. HENVEY, Agent to the Governor-General in Central India, has opened a new hospital at Rutlam, built at the expense of the Raja.

A NEW public library is to be opened in Madras.

CAPTAIN RUNDALL, commanding the advance party sent by General Symons to communicate with General Tregear, has succeeded in recovering the heads of Lieut. Stewart and the two English soldiers who were murdered with him by the Shendus in the spring of 1888.

THE English cricketers have beaten a representative Punjab team at Lahore by an innings and forty runs.

A PRIVATE of the 7th Dragoons at Umballa, charged with murdering two Native boys, has been committed to the Sessions on a charge of causing death by negligence.

PRIVATE O'HARA, now under sentence of death for murder, has appealed to the High Court of Calcutta.

THE rate of Exchange for the payment of British troops in India for next year has been fixed at one shilling and fivepence.

ONE object of the Chin-Lushai Expedition is the establishment of an overland route from Bengal to Upper Burma.

BY a gunpowder explosion at Rajpura, in the Patiala State, several lives were lost.

AN epidemic of fever has visited Bombay, increasing the death-rate among Natives.

THE Chin and Lushai Columns met on the 27th ultimo.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to work the Delhi-Kalka Railway by the East Indian Railway Company.

SURGEON-MAJOR E. PALMER, 9th Bengal Lancers, who was in medical charge lately at Muridki Camp, has been for some weeks laid up in Lahore suffering from typhoid fever. He is, however, out of danger.

THE COUNTESS OF STRATHMORE and her daughters, the Ladies Lyon, who are at present on a visit to Jodhpur leave Bombay on the 7th prox. in the P. and O. Co's steamer Peninsular for England.

NOTES.

SIR DAVID BARBOUR has been fortunate, in his office of Financial Minister of India, in having been able to present a Budget which, according to the Times Calcutta correspondent, is declared by the public verdict to be the most satisfactory Budget of the last seven or eight years. There has been a satisfactory increase under the important heads of land revenue, salt, excise, stamps, customs, and assessed taxes; opium—that terrible trouble to Indian financiers—has not fallen in price much below last year's estimate, and there has been a reduction in expenditure under the heads of special defences, interest, and the army.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Daily News does not, however, endorse the opinion of the Times correspondent. According to the Gladstonian journal, the local papers in Calcutta in discussing the Budget show some disapproval. They regret the absence of any prospect of finality to the heavy cost of frontier defences. What are the local papers referred to? We have a shrewd guess that they are only the Native papers which, whether printed in the vernacular or in English, would be untrue to themselves if they did not carp at and find fault with any official statement emanating from Government. A Budget which promises the Finance Minister such a surplus as to allow him partially to restore the famine grant, to extend railway and canal construction, and to reduce borrowings, cannot but be a satisfactory one.

Two persons in England will certainly approve of it, at least in one direction. Mr. Cairne, M.P., and Mr. S. Smith, M.P., will rejoice with an exceeding great joy, no doubt, to learn that an addition of one rupee per gallon has been added to the duty on imported spirits, and that a duty has been imposed on Indian-brewed beer equal to that on imported beer. These impositions will bring in, it is calculated, Rs. 100,000 to the Revenue, and this is all they will do; they will not help the cause of temperance or total abstinence one iota, although the worthy M.P.'s named may think so. The Indian brewers are, fortunately, now in so strong a position that they can afford to meet the proposed imposition without difficulty or demur. But it will remain an open question whether the Government of India does wisely in being so ready always to tax a local industry under the pressure of home competitors. It matters not what the local industry be; the question is, Is the policy wise?

It certainly is not encouraging to capitalists who embark money in Indian enterprises to learn that when, after perhaps years of labour and loss, the tide turns to success that moment is seized upon to burden the enterprise with taxation as much in the interests of home and foreign competitors as in that of the State itself. We are not alleging that the profits of the Indian brewers—who, however, be it remembered, have to pay income-tax—will not stand a little extra impost for the benefit of the Indian revenue; but it is no secret that in their case the imposition has been encouraged by the influence of certain parties at home interested in the matter of importing English beer to India with the view of obtaining the military contracts, and ousting, if possible, the country brewed article from the regimental canteens.

THE philanthropists will, however, rejoice at what they will consider by these duties on spirits and beer as a triumph for their cause—that of ameliorating poor India. Fortunately this kind of philanthropist is known, and can be taken at his proper value. Dr. Johnson said that "patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel"; Lord Teynham does not go quite so far in his definition of a philanthropist as given by him at the Uncovenanted Service dinner to Mr. King the other evening, but he fairly approached it in saying, "If there is a man against whom I have the strongest prejudice it is the philanthropist. I think he is the most odious of mankind. That is my experience."

ACCORDING to Mr. William Digby's new journal, India, Mr. Frederick Pincott has achieved an unique feat in shooting. "Firing at a hawk, he not only brings down that bird, but hits a golden eagle." The meaning of this metaphor is that Mr. Pincott, having written a letter to our Congress contemporary in reply to the Evening News and Post, which journal had stated that the Indian Mutiny was caused by the mischievous endeavour to graft Western ideas upon an Eastern people, the editor of India considers that Mr. Pincott not only brings the Post down to earth, but Lord Salisbury (who had expressed similar opinions to those of the evening journal) also. Mr. Pincott proves both to be wrong, and says, "it is a fact that all the leaders in that so-called Mutiny (sic) were people who had suffered wrongs similar to those which have recently been inflicted on the Begum of Bhopal, the Maharaja of Kashmir, and the Royal Family of Nepal." These latter "so-called" wrongs, it may be noted, have been inflicted by the Government of India, with the approval of the Secretary of State in Council.

BUT, as the editor of India puts it, "Probably if some people knew our fellow-subjects in India as thoroughly as Mr. Pincott knows them, their faith in Indian character would not be such a minus quantity as it is at the present moment."

A CORRESPONDENT writes to a contemporary:—"The Russians are evidently not standing idle, so far as the Central Asian preparations are concerned. A correspondent at Odessa announces that 2,000 ammunition carts, baggage waggons, and other military transport vehicles, all of the most improved types, and built in Warsaw, have arrived there for shipment to Batoum. They will thence be forwarded by rail and steamer across the Caspian; but for what part of Central Asia this warlike equipment is destined is not known. A local firm has received an order for a first consignment of fifty pontoon boats of very shallow draught, suitable for landing troops. The destination of these boats also remains a secret. As I have before stated, Russia is steadily pursuing a preparatory policy, unretarded by any pacific aspect which the general political position may temporarily present."

It is reported in military circles that the appointment of Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at the Horse Guards, vacated by the nomination of Sir W. S. Lockhart to the command of the Punjab Frontier Force, will not be filled up for the present. But rumours which take their rise in the military clubs are not always to be depended upon. A few days ago the report was spread abroad that Lord Wolseley was about to proceed to take up the Irish command, the gossipers forgetting that his lordship's services away from his present post are not likely to be required before October next.

THERE is some anxiety in military circles lest another rumour turns out to be true, viz., that Lord Wolseley will succeed Sir Frederick Roberts. The wish can hardly be said in this case to be father to the thought. Besides, if the office of Commander-in-Chief is to be done away with in England, as recommended by the late Commission, will the office of Commander-in-Chief in India be retained? if the arguments in favour of the abolition of the office at home are sound—as forcible reasons may be found for the abolition of the post in India. At present, however, all that is certain is that no decision has yet been come to with regard to the Indian command.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 23.

Sir David Barbour presented his financial statement at a meeting of the Legislative Council on Friday, but no debate took place, it having been arranged that the discussion should be postponed to next Friday. It was generally expected that the Budget would give a favourable view of the financial position, and the result fully bears out anticipations; indeed, the popular verdict so far is that it is the most satisfactory Budget of the last seven or eight years. The principal figures are as follows:—The accounts of 1888-89 close with a surplus of Rx. 37,000, instead of a deficit of Rx. 201,700, as estimated a year ago. The surplus of Rx. 106,300 estimated for the current year has been converted into one of Rx. 2,733,200, while the estimate for the coming year shows a surplus of Rx. 304,900.

Sir D. Barbour's statement begins by explaining the causes of the great increase in the surplus of the current year. The recent improvement in the exchanges, he says, although most welcome to the Government, has not had so much to do with the result as is generally supposed, for it amounted in the whole year to only about one-sixth of a penny per rupee, representing a net gain of about Rx. 200,000. Opium has had much greater influence. There was a poor crop in Bengal last year, and as the total crop is purchased by Government at a fixed price, it followed that there was a saving in expenditure amounting to Rx. 708,800. At the same time, the rise in the price of the opium sold by Government caused an increase in the opium revenue of Rx. 286,400. Last year's bad crop had done no material injury, as the opium reserve was still high and sufficient, but the present selling price was much below last year's average, so the improvement in the opium revenue must be considered merely temporary. There had also been a satisfactory increase under the other principal heads, including land revenue, salt, excise, stamps, customs, and assessed taxes. There had been a reduction in expenditure under the heads of special defences, interest, and the army. The general growth of the revenue might be expected to be maintained in future years; but only a moderate surplus was estimated for next year, because the Government would lose the temporary improvement under opium; because it would no longer receive a special contribution of Rx. 490,000 from the provincial Governments; because there were special demands in connection with the equipment of the army with the magazine rifles, and the cost of twenty-one more batteries of 12-pounder breechloading guns; and because there was an increase in the next interest charges, as well as in the expenditure on special defences.

Sir D. Barbour then goes on to say that, in view of the comparatively favourable prospect, the Government has decided to anticipate the future to some extent and partially restore the famine grant. After giving a short history of that grant or famine insurance fund as it used to be called, and of the circumstances which led to its practical abolition four years ago, he describes the manner in which it is proposed partially to restore it. In the first place, a special contribution of Rx. 490,000 due from the local Governments will not be credited till next month, thus diminishing this year's surplus and increasing that of next year by that amount. In both years a certain amount of expenditure is already shown under the grant for famine relief and insurance, and out of the surplus of the current year a sum of Rx. 433,500 will be utilised to raise the total famine grant to Rx. 600,000, while of the surplus of the coming year a sum of Rx. 524,500 will be utilised to raise that year's famine grant to a like amount. The surplus of the revised estimate of the current year will then stand at Rx. 1,809,700, and that of the Budget estimate of the coming year at Rx. 270,400. The famine grant will be devoted to railway and canal construction, while the surpluses will be available for the reduction of the borrowings.

After concluding his general review of the financial position Sir D. Barbour alludes to the hopeful remarks made by him last year. The progress made in the current year, he maintains, confirms the soundness of the opinions he expressed last March. He states that the Government does not expect to have recourse to borrowing, although no pledge to that effect is given.

The only new taxation consists of an addition of one rupee per gallon to the duty on imported spirits, and the imposition of a duty on Indian brewed beer, equal to that on imported beer. These together are expected to yield about Rx. 130,000. He adds:—

"I said last year that there were signs of improvements; I say now that my forecast is borne out by the facts of the year which is about to close, and that there are good grounds for expecting further improvement in the coming year; but I fully recognise that we have difficulties of no slight magnitude still to meet, that the finances are exposed to many dangers, and that unforeseen disaster might for a time upset calculations. There is every need for caution and economy, and I should greatly regret if anything I now say or have said in the past conveyed the impression that the Government of India is in a position to embark on a policy of adventure of any description."

The arrival by the last mail of the text of Lord Cross's Indian Councils Bill has added interest to the discussion on that measure which has been going on in the columns of the Indian Press for the last few weeks. The Anglo-Indian journals, as a general rule, approve of the omission of the elective principle, but some of them are not satisfied with the Bill in other respects. Thus the Pioneer describes it as a measure which seems conscious of going in the wrong direction and relies on the plea that it goes only a little way.

The Madras Mail suggests that a Native member should be added to each Executive Council, and says such step would do more to protect Native interests than any scheme of popular election.

The more extreme Congress organs continue to declaim against the Bill as a sham, while the moderate portion of the Native Press is disposed to approve or at least accept it as an instalment of better things to come. Reis and Ray-yet, perhaps the ablest Native journal on this side of India, describes it as a fair measure, and advises Congress to take it in good part.

Sir Madhava Rao has spoken again on the subject. He points out that the experience of Europe has shown that representative government produces much good and much evil; therefore, in introducing it in India responsible British statesmen should exercise great caution that good may be produced and evil excluded. It might be wrong, he goes on, to introduce that system at once merely because Congress asks for it. It is absolutely necessary to take measures cautiously and tentatively. He then proceeds to rebut the charge of political inconsistency brought against him by some Native papers, and states that when he met Mr. Hume in Madras he told him he thought the elective system would be premature in India.

Prince Albert Victor spent last week in visiting various Native States in Kattiawar. He was received with great honour, and there were public rejoicings everywhere. The business of attending State functions was varied by some sporting expeditions, the most interesting of which, that to shoot lions at Junagar, does not appear to have been very successful, owing to the scarcity of game. The next few days will witness the parting festivities at Bombay.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has been making a tour of inspection of Chota Nagpore for the purpose of personally inquiring into the recent disturbances among the aboriginal tribes of Kols. The result of the inquiry has appeared in the form of a Government resolution remitting or modifying the sentences which the Deputy-Commissioner of Lohardaga had passed upon a number of Kols who had been convicted of rioting. Sir Stuart Bayley also remarks that the comments made by the Deputy-Commissioner on the conduct of some Roman Catholic missionaries ought not to have appeared in the judgment, as they were in no degree justified by the evidence on record.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Friday Bills to amend the law on the subjects of guardians and wards, railways, and printing presses were passed. The last meeting of the Calcutta session will be held next Friday, after which the Government will remove to Simla. The Viceroy leaves Calcutta on the 30th, and proceeds, via Dehra, Mussoorie, and Chakrata, to Simla, where he arrives about the end of April.

The committee lately appointed for the purpose of drawing up rules for the grant of mining and prospecting leases has now completed its sittings. The result of the deliberations has not yet been made public.

The Madras High Court, after hearing the appeal of the Mohunt of Tripati, who was lately convicted of criminal misappropriation of the Temple funds, has affirmed the conviction, but reduced the sentence from three years' rigorous to eighteen months' simple imprisonment.

It is announced that O'Hara, the soldier whose conviction on a charge of murdering a Native was recently quashed on a point of law by a full bench of the Calcutta High Court, has been discharged from the Army. The case has caused much excitement here, and it is recognised on all sides that there has been a failure of justice, as a brutal crime will go unpunished; but it is much to be regretted that some Native journals make use of the incident to rake up race animosities, and openly assert that O'Hara owes his escape to the fact of his being a European.

The influenza epidemic appears likely to spread through India as widely and rapidly as through Europe. Some Native traders from Bombay have carried it to Calcutta. Over one hundred cases are now reported here, and the malady has also appeared in a number of other cities in various parts of the country. It is said to be dying out in Bombay.

BOMBAY, MARCH 23.

Prince Albert Victor returned here yesterday evening, and was received on arrival with the full honours due to his rank.

His Royal Highness was warmly welcomed by the population on his way to Government-house, and the route was gaily decorated throughout. Wednesday will be observed as a public holiday. The city will be illuminated, and great preparations are being made for various festivities.

SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 23.

The Convention between England and China regarding Sikkim was signed by the Viceroy and the Chinese Amban, or Imperial Resident, on Monday. The event was marked by some ceremony. The Amban, with his secretaries and suite, all richly dressed and wearing official insignia, arrived at Government House about four o'clock. The Foreign Secretary to the Indian Government received and conducted them to the Council Chamber. The Viceroy, attended by Messrs. Scoble and Hutchins and by his staff, then came in. The preliminaries of presenting powers and comparing copies of the Convention having been gone through the signatures were attached, the Amban using a brush which he dipped in a dish of Indian ink, held by three attendants. The copies were then formally sealed, and, after a short conversation, the Amban was conducted to his carriage.

He still remains in Calcutta, and is assiduously devoting his time to sight-seeing. He returns to Lhasa, via Darjeeling, in a few days.

It is understood that the main effect of the treaty is to confirm the British claims to treat Sikkim as a feudatory State.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 22.

During their recent tour in Upper Burma Sir Charles Arbuthnot and General Gordon made a careful inspection of the commissariat supplies at every post, opening bags, boxes, and tins at random. All the supplies were found in good order.

Sir C. Crosthwaite has held a durbar of the Southern Shan chiefs at Fort Stedman. He impressed on the Tsawbwas the necessity of paying their tribute punctually.

The Mandalay and Kyaukse districts are disturbed by dacoit bands, under the dacoit Boh Ngakyaw. This leader was recently captured, but after a few hours' confinement was allowed to escape. The Yenangyoung and Mogwe districts are also troubled by dacoits.

The case of Grange, a soldier of the Cheshire Regiment, who was tried nearly two years ago and sentenced to death for murdering two Burmese women, was again before the Courts this week. The Recorder decided that he had no power to grant the application of the Government to re-try the prisoner, the High Court of Calcutta having pronounced the original trial irregular. As the prisoner cannot be tried again the only course seems to be to discharge him. Grange has been kept under sentence of death for over eighteen months.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, MARCH 22.

The fine on the Tashons was originally fixed at 10,000 rupees, but Brigadier-General Symons reduced the amount to 5,000 rupees, which the chiefs agreed to pay. It has been ascertained that until the 1st of March the Tashons had decided on resisting our advance. They refrained from doing so on finding that a combined advance was to be made against them from Haka and Fort White. The country north of the Tashon Ywama towards Fort White was found to be fortified with stone and earthen breastworks for a distance of six miles.

During the return of the troops from the Tashon Ywama to Haka a mountain gun fell over a precipice. A gun mule was killed, but the gun was recovered. The Tashon country was found to be thickly populated and studded with villages.

Brigadier-General Symons telegraphs that in his opinion all anxiety regarding the situation is at an end. This view is not generally accepted. It is almost certain that another expedition will be necessary next year to accomplish the subjugation of the Chins. There is much disturbance in the Kale valley from detached parties of Chins; the telegraph wires have been destroyed, and nineteen miles of wire were recently carried away. Very heavy rains are reported from the Chin country.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

MONEY LENDING BY UNCOVENANTED CIVIL SERVANTS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We have already noted the recent extension of the order issued in 1793 which prohibits Covenanted Civil Servants from lending money, directly or indirectly, to any proprietor or farmer of land, or independent talukdar or under-farmer, or rayat or their sureties. By a Government resolution published in 1882, this prohibition was extended to Natives of India appointed to an office ordinarily reserved for members of the Covenanted Civil Service. Now these rules have been further made applicable to Uncovenanted Civil Servants. Instances have been brought to notice in which uncovenanted gazetted officers have lent large sums of money, at very high, and even usurious, rates of interest, to landholders of the province, and in some cases of the district in which they are serving. Government, of course, thinks it very desirable that this practice should be discontinued at once, and has accordingly directed that the existing rules on the subject which apply to Covenanted Civil Servants and members of the Statutory Civil Service shall be extended to all uncovenanted officers in the subordinate executive and judicial services in India. Such officers are, therefore, now prohibited from lending money at interest, whether directly or through relatives, or rather agents, to landholders, with or without security, within the province in which they are employed. We have every reason to believe that the Uncovenanted Civil Service money-lenders brought to light were Natives, and not Europeans, though possibly the gullible public in England will believe Bengali agitators, who pretend that the recent order has special reference to the prohibition of the latter from ill-treating the former. The statement, for ignorance and malice, is equalled by another that the present Uncovenanted Civil Service movement, headed by Mr. King, has for its object the squeezing of more filthy lucre out of India's overtaxed exchequer to add to already ill-gotten gains. Be this as it may, however, we certainly think the whole subject goes to fairly prove that some Natives are paid too highly for their work. In most countries in the world the official class is a financially poor one, but in India the Native official class appears to be ex-officio capitalists.

OUR FRONTIER PROGRESS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Is there not some misnomer in the present circle of engineering works known as the "Frontier Railway Survey?" This has lately been given over by Mr. Ramsay to Mr. J. R. Bell, and includes, we believe, the Mianwali-Kalabagh extension, the Umarnot-Hyderabad Railway, the Campbellpur extension, and the location of a new bridge on the Indus, as well as, when the occasion arises—probably very soon—a railway through the Gomal Pass. The last, however, still belongs to the future, and is the only one of the projects mentioned which is a real "frontier" scheme: whereas Mr. Upcott's charge of the Kabul River Survey is distinctly "frontier." This argument is enhanced by the fact that the "Kabul" part of the strategic frontier will be that on which the Government will bestow their first and best thoughts for some time to come. This has been necessitated, we think, by the tremendous strength of our position at Quetta. Our enemies must know very well what we have done there: and the impregnability (as we believe) of Quetta compels an enemy from the north-west to look at the other end of our frontier for the opening through which to attack us. We must, therefore, bring our Khyber-Kabul defences to something like a level with those of Quetta-Kandahar before we can talk of a real scientific frontier; and after this will come the turn of the Gomal-Ghuzni centre of our line of defence; and of our outlying position beyond Gilgit, by Chitral and Kafiristan. The man who lives to see all these carried out, as the Quetta portion has been, will see India absolutely assured from invasion, or even the threat of invasion, on her north-west frontier. At any rate, we believe that attention bestowed upon these undertakings is vastly more urgent than care for our "second line of defence" on the Indus. To spend much money on the latter seems to imply a doubt of our ability to hold the frontier; and the fortifications of Rawalpindi and Sukkur are thus in their import discouraging. We would not set our opinion against that of those who have the care of the empire and know all the details of fact upon which a strategic determination must be based: but so far as our knowledge goes, we would say:—Spend every rupee that can be spared to secure against all comers the gates of India through the Khyber, the Gomal, and the northern passes from Kashmir. Improve the whole army of Kashmir till it can take its proper place in our first line of defence: conclude an offensive and defensive agreement with Chitral; take Kafiristan (as well, of course, as Bajaur and Swat) under our protection; recruit from those regions new regiments, or at least tribal levies. Use the tribesmen beyond the Gomal, as we have used the Afridis of the Khyber. Thus we should assure ourselves of the command of the roads to Kabul, Ghazni and Kandahar, with an unbroken fringe of armed frontier territory covering the whole north-western frontier of the Empire from the sea coast at Karachi to the uplands of Tibet. The Government is, we believe, awake to most of the opportunities which we have pointed out, with one important exception. We have seen no sign of a desire to seize the chance offered to us, perhaps for the last time, to save Kafiristan for ourselves. Colonel Durand at Gilgit could with a word, if he were instructed to say it, secure Kafiristan—that mysterious country of unconquered highlanders who claims kinship with ourselves—to the side of the Government of India. This race of hardy and fanatical mountaineers, who have held their own for ages against Muhammadan enemies on all sides, should make splendid material for our army; and might subserve, as the Gorkha regiments do, a most important political end which we need not specify. The inclusion of Kafiristan within the range of our influence would presuppose similar straightforward dealing with Bajaur and Swat; and here, too, the opportunity seems ready made to our hand, in the ambition, ability and desire for British assistance displayed by Umra Khan of Jandol. With a small percentage to him of the magnificent subsidy allowed to Kabul, we could create a friendly and united North-East Afghanistan extending from the Kabul river to Chitral and Kafiristan. With these two regions also bound to our side, we should at last possess a complete and uninterrupted strategic frontier, which no enemy could pierce, and against the possessor of which no enemy could maintain himself in Afghanistan, even supposing that the Afghans sided with him.

ELEVATORS FOR INDIA.

(Englishman.)

The proposed Grain Cleaning and Elevator Company, of which we have lately made mention, will, according to the representations of its promoters, be a concern of no inconsiderable magnitude and importance. In addition to its business of wheat cleaning and grading it will act as the agent of producers and merchants, and will also "make advances of money against grain held in the elevators, or to ryots on the security of their land and crops," in this last respect assuming the functions of a land bank. It is not likely, however, that the project will, in its present form, reach the stage of practical development. The concessions and guarantees demanded are too considerable to be granted by the Government in their entirety, though the Secretary of State would sanction the granting of some assistance to the company. The reform which it is desired to effect is, after all, a matter which concerns, in the first place, those who would be affected by it, be they producers, middlemen or consumers, but it is encouraging to mark the readiness with which official zeal nowadays promotes what it deems the trade interests of the country. If favourable terms are obtained from the Government the company will at first proceed tentatively—cleaning and grading wheat at a few stations only until the superior quality of the grain thus handled has created a large demand for it, when the sphere of operations would be extended. Should the elevator system be actually introduced into India it could be made successful only if the co-operation of the Home Corn Trade Associations were first secured. If the latter put a penalty on all deliveries of wheat which were unaccompanied by an Elevator Company's certificate of purity the reform would be at once carried out. Whether the advantages of the change would all lie one way is another matter. The promoters of the proposed company claim that one result of the alteration would be the transfer of the trade from the hands of a few experts to whoever chose to deal in wheat under the company's certificates. This, as in America, would probably lead to the business becoming entirely, and perhaps wildly, speculative.

THE VICEROY OF BENGAL.

(Madras Mail.)

It is a great pity that in these days of extended railway and steamer communications the Viceroy and his chief civil and military advisers do not travel more over the great peninsular for whose prosperity they are responsible. India does not consist of Bengal alone, nor can her military requirements, and the spirit of her sons, be gauged by a superficial acquaintance with Bengal any more than her civil necessities can be ascertained through the enthusiastic proposals of delegates to the National Congress. "Veni, vidi, vici," was the pithy report of Cæsar of old when he had won one of his most important campaigns; and if the head of the Indian Government would come with his entourage, and see those parts of the country for whose benefit, without any personal familiarity, he is called upon to decide many complex questions, he would be in a materially better position to judge them aright, and to overcome the difficulties inseparable from the task. If leisure or opportunity forbid his doing this, then the sooner we fall back upon Mr. Bright's proposal, and introduce half-a-dozen, or more, practically independent satrapies, the better. Surely India has suffered enough from having its civil and military headquarters immured at Simla. As it is the Viceroy is becoming more and more the Viceroy of Bengal rather than, as he ought to be, of all India. He lives, moves, and has his being almost exclusively in Bengal, and he learns to think with the Pioneer, that Bengal is India.

HINDUS AND MAHOMEDANS.

(Madras Times.)

That there exists in England a lamentable want of knowledge of India, her people and her affairs, is well known. Of late, the London agency of the "National Congress" has professed to be enlightening the British public, and other similar professions have been made by private individuals. That the "enlightenment" has been one-sided and prejudiced has been suspected by many, and the following specimen taken from a Magazine article recently published in London shows that one instance, at least, can be adduced to prove that suspicions such as we refer to have not been altogether unfounded. A Hindu Barrister-at-Law is responsible for the following misleading statement, professedly a reply to a statement that if the Congress-Wallahs became successful, the Mahomedans would be swamped by the Hindus:—"The so-much-talked-of antagonism between Hindus and Mahomedans exists in the brains of our critics only; those who know anything of India know that Hindus and Mahomedans are, for all practical purposes, one nation; leaving religion aside, in everything else—in social customs and manners, in intellectual tastes and pursuits—there is hardly any material difference between the two; and if, as a French philosopher says, the sentiment of nationality is based upon common oblivions and common recollections, then, indeed, it may be asserted, that Hindus and Mahomedans have nearly forgotten the bitter feuds of past times." That all this is untrue is just what is known by those who know something about India. It is all very well to talk of a sentiment of common nationality based upon feelings of amity and tolerance; that English education is a nationalising force may be accepted as true; but as matters stand at present, there are only too obvious signs of antagonism between Hindus and Mahomedans and of divergences in social customs and manners, as well as in intellectual pursuits. In case some doubts should linger in the minds of any of our readers, we may make a few remarks to substantiate the statement we have made.

Our Indian Army is composite, the men being drawn from various nationalities and creeds. The Pathan, the Rajput, the Brahman, the Mahomedan, the Pariah and others are in the ranks, and stand shoulder to shoulder on the parade ground, while on the march, and when engaged in action. The animosity of caste and creed would, under such conditions, seem to have become extinct. It would also appear that among these races there is an identity of interests and pursuits. Yet this appears to be the case only so long as the races are constrained by the stern hand of discipline to act as a united body. The sepoy loves his pay and submits without a murmur to the command of his superiors, so long as they leave his caste free from interference. If one thing more than another is needed to weld men of various nationalities and religions into one "nation" having common oblivions and common recollections, "it may be found in service under a common master, and, in times of war, in the sharing of common danger. The last two conditions may seem powerful enough to coalesce races and to make different peoples forget their jarring interests, creeds, and other traditional antipathies. Yet in the Indian Army the sameness, the oneness, of interests and feelings extends only while the men are on duty. When they are no longer under discipline, the sight is worth seeing by a visionary who dreams that Hindus and Mahomedans have practically become one nation. The social manners and customs of the races are different. Out of the parade ground, the Hindu shuns his Mahomedan comrade, no less than the latter shuns the former. Each goes apart, each cooks for himself, and each associates with his castemen. The Mahomedan will not admit the Hindu into his house, lest the profane gaze of the latter should defile the sanctity of the Zenana. Nor will the Hindu admit the Mahomedan into his house, lest the unsanctified presence of the casteless should render his domicile unholy, and his domestic utensils unclean. If there is any school which should teach more widely and more persistently than any other those common oblivions and recollections to which allusion has been made, our Indian army, broadly speaking, is such a school. Yet we have but to study it to see how it fares. And is a common language likely to be more successful? This, it might be thought, would act powerfully to fuse party with party, and to bring about a new or united nation. But here, too, castes and creeds still assert their sway. They may be undermined, but they are still far from falling. The vernacular of certain classes of Hindus, both in the North and in the South, is Hindustani. Again, certain classes of Mahomedans speak some one of the languages of the Hindus. Yet the Hindus continue Hindus, the Mahomedans are still Mahomedans, in thought, in feeling, in prejudice, and much more in religion.

In the face of such facts it is unwise to assert that Hindus and Mahomedans have nearly forgotten the bitter feuds of past times, and that they are equally proud of the glory of Akbar or Shahjehan. No doubt the Hindu reader of history is familiar with Akbar, though all Hindus are not. Akbar perhaps wished to found a lasting Mahomedan Empire in India, and his policy was to bring about intermarriages between Hindus and Mahomedans. The prospects of success in this direction are as remote now as ever, and this fact alone shows that it must be long ere Hindus and Mahomedans can truly be termed one nation, if indeed that time ever comes. In all parts of India, too, there have been of late disturbances of such a character as to give the lie direct to any statement that ancient feuds have been forgotten, and that the hatchet of war has given place to the calumet of peace. There have been such disturbances in Madras itself, as well as elsewhere in Southern India, and in the North. Isolated instances may not have much importance, yet there are signs that the Government does not regard these particular cases as unworthy of its attention. Whatever may be said to the contrary by men who wish to mislead the British public, the fact remains that an impassable gulf still lies between Mahomedans and Hindus, a gulf that time has not yet contrived to bridge.

STAFF CORPS AND STAFF COLLEGE.

(Pioneer.)

In a speech made at the Staff College dinner at Simla last year Sir Thomas Baker strongly advised all young officers of the Indian Army to endeavour to pass through the Staff College. As an inducement to them to do so he gave it as his opinion that, in the near future, all the best military appointments in India will be held by those who have passed through the college. Whether this anticipation will ever be realised or not the future must show; but at the present time, when the competition for entrance to the college is decidedly on the increase amongst officers of the Indian Army, it may be of interest to take stock briefly of the advantages and disadvantages of the Staff College course, leaving it to each individual to decide for himself to which side the balance inclines.

The disadvantages may be summed up in two words: extra work and extra expense. The first of these, indeed, we may disregard, for by far the hardest and most unpleasant part of the work has been done by the time that the candidate has gone through the entrance competition, and once success in the examination has been achieved, any man who is unwilling to face the amount of study necessary for passing through the college will find furlough a more congenial and, in his case, probably a more profitable excuse for a visit to England. The real difficulty which stands in the way of the majority of Staff Corps officers is the heavy expense which the course involves. Those who compete at the entrance examinations are, as a rule, young captains who, having vacated the appointment of adjutant on promotion, find themselves thrown back upon regimental duties identical with those of the last joined probationer, and with no more power or responsibility than pertains to that interesting individual. These officers, looking for more congenial employment, turn their eyes naturally towards the General Staff. Being usually without interest at head-quarters, the Staff College appears to be the most direct road to an appointment.

The majority of them are married and a close calculation of ways and means is therefore necessary. The pay drawn by a married captain of the Indian Army while at the College is as follows:—

Pay at 10s. 6d. per day ... ..	191	12	6
House rent at 2s. 3d. ... ..	41	1	4
Allowance in lieu of servant ... ..	35	0	0
Coal and candles at 5d. (average)... ..	7	12	1
Total	275	5	11

Forage and stabling for one horse are also provided. A special allowance of £20 per annum has been lately granted in order to make this pay equal to that of a captain of British Infantry. Thus the total sum drawn by a married captain is £295 5s. 11d. per annum.

Now incomes are relative; and in estimating the value of £300 a year to its recipient, one has to consider what he has got to do with it. In the first place an officer will not be long in discovering that Sandhurst, or to write more accurately Camberley, is an unusually expensive place; that the subscriptions to the various amusements and entertainments at the College are very high; that he is expected to provide himself with a horse, and to purchase a considerable quantity of costly books and instruments. Initial expenditure over, he is one of a Society which has a certain easy and liberal standard of living by which all its members must to a certain extent be guided. It will be clear that his £300 compares very unfavourably with ordinary furlough pay. It may be accepted as the experience of a number of officers that a married man, even with the most rigid economy, will necessarily expend not less than £300 a-year in addition to his pay: and this of course is not what every Indian officer can afford to do. One other drawback may be mentioned here. No one who has once passed into the College should fail to pass out, even with a very moderate amount of work; but there is an element of uncertainty about every examination, and should an Indian officer from any cause fail to qualify either at the close of his first or of his second year's course, he is subject to a very heavy penalty. Under similar circumstances, an officer from a British regiment rejoins his battalion none the worse for his mishap. An Indian officer, on the other hand, forfeits the whole period of absence from his regiment, which period (possibly as much as two years) ceases absolutely to reckon towards promotion or pension.

To turn now to the advantages of the Staff College. After a free passage home the officer who joins the College finds himself settled down for two years in an exceedingly pretty and a very pleasant neighbourhood, within thirty miles of London by rail and within seven miles of Aldershot. This last fact gives him ample opportunity of convincing himself how much better we manage military affairs in India. He is a member of a very pleasant and a very comfortable mess, and, as a rule, the officers studying at the College, the elect from all parts of the army, are as pleasant a set of men as can be met with anywhere in the service or out of it. There are fourteen weeks of regular leave in the year, and a day or two can be had at any time during the terms for the trouble of asking. Unless a man has set his heart on obtaining honours, the work is by no means excessive, except perhaps in the last two months of the course, and on the whole there are probably few more pleasant ways of spending two years in England. But, after all, the real question has not been touched in this balance of considerations. After the money has been spent and the work done, how much nearer is the successful candidate to the wished-for appointment? That is not a question that can possibly admit of an exact reply; but there is a strong feeling in the Indian Army that a little influence is worth any number of Staff College certificates. Time alone can show which is the more correct—the general opinion of the army based on past experience, or Sir Thomas Baker's forecast based, we may suppose, on the avowed intentions of the powers that be.

RECRUITS FOR THE INDIAN ARMY.

(Times of India.)

Some weeks ago, when reviewing the position of the Bombay Army as it stood at the beginning of the present year, we dwelt on the difficulties which Commanding Officers had to contend against in the way of getting good recruits, and expressed our regret that the regulations in regard to the enlistment of "foreigners" had been recently enforced with so much strictness. There was nothing out of the way in our remarks. We merely gave utterance to the experience of almost every Commanding Officer in the army of this Presidency, namely, that the old class of Mahrattas are becoming more and more difficult to get; that Rajputana as a recruiting ground was inadequate to the demands on it; and that, in fact, the situation was beset with difficulties. These remarks of ours have been eagerly seized on by our contemporary the Pioneer, and have been made the occasion of various little homilies, the burden of which is always the same, viz., that if the warlike spirit has gone out of the Mahrattas, and they prefer the more solid and certain gains of civil employment to the smaller pay and unsettled life of a soldier; and if it has already become difficult to get recruits in Rajputana, why, then, the obvious remedy is to decrease the Bombay and Madras regiments, and in their place to raise battalions from among the warlike tribes on our Northern Frontier. There is something so simple and easy, so obviously sensible about this plan at first sight, and so entirely in harmony with the military interests exclusively represented by our contemporary, that we do not at all wonder he should urge it so warmly and persistently. Yet a little reflection will show that it has grave drawbacks, and as our contemporary has himself unconsciously given an excellent idea of what those drawbacks are, we will quote his own words. But first we must state that, in the course of our remarks, we shall not speak solely in the interest of the Bombay army. It is absurd to make the question a Presidency one. The Indian army, as a whole, is a vast political as well as a military machine, and it is by ignoring this simple, but important, fact, that so many mistakes are made. And with this proviso we will quote the statements of our contemporary to which we alluded above, and we shall quote at some length so that there shall be no mistake about the line of argument taken up. After disposing of the Bombay Army he goes on:—"What happened in the case of the Bengal Army was that, as the wave of conquest rolled westwards and north from Lower Bengal, race after race of fighting-men were absorbed: Oudh, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab in turn furnishing splendid material for the ranks. After the great convulsion of the Mutiny, the bulk of the Panday Army disappeared, and the Punjab became the great recruiting ground. Even this has shown signs of being partially exhausted, and attention has been turned to districts across the frontier, where warlike races abound. At the same time extra demands have been made upon the population of Nepal, the five Goorkha battalions in the Himalayas being doubled in strength. The Bengal Army, therefore, has not so far suffered materially from the decline of the martial races whose members once flocked to its colours, for there have always been fresh fields of recruitment open to it. Bombay, unfortunately for itself, has now no prospect of getting new blood into its army."

What the above amounts to is this. We have tamed the people of Oudh and the North-West, so that they no longer make efficient soldiers, and we have partially exhausted the warlike material of the Punjab. The demands on Nepal have seriously tried its capacity for giving us soldiers, but the Bengal Army has not suffered "materially" as yet, because it has frontier tribes to draw on. Yes, but where is this to stop? If our civilisation has tamed the Mahrattas and the Pandies, and is fast taming the Sikhs, it is only a matter of time until its subtle influences permeate to what are now warlike tribes, and make them prefer the pursuits of peace to the hardships of war. The more this country is opened up, the more railways multiply and spread, and the natural resources of the land are developed, the more widespread will be the decay of the warlike spirit everywhere, until at last we shall have no fighting men left at all. This is the logical, the inexorable conclusion to which our contemporary's argument leads, and there is no escape from it. And it is for this reason we urge that the question is an Imperial one, in which we are all equally interested, and not one that can be settled by the summary process of disbanding a few regiments here, and replacing them by a few regiments elsewhere. But is it true in any wide sense that our conquest of India, and its subsequent peaceful occupation by us, has crushed all martial ardour out of whole populations? We are decidedly of opinion that it is not. Europe has reached the extreme of civilisation, and has attained to a pitch of wealth and luxury hitherto unthought of, and Europe is one big standing camp of soldiers, who are only longing for the signal to fly to arms. It is true that, with the exception of England, service in the ranks is compulsory and frequently cordially disliked, but that does not make men fight the worse when the moment arrives. Here in India service is voluntary, and though the whole of our Native army may be termed "mercenary," in the sense that they fight for foreign masters, still our sepoy levies have always shown that they fight for us with as much bravery and good-will as though it was their own cause they were contesting. No, the recruitment of our Indian Army is one of the most pressing questions of the day, and it cannot be met by constantly looking out for new and warlike tribes to swell our ranks. We must rather look to improving the material we have, to getting the very best British officers we can with our native battalions, and to making the service attractive to those stout able-bodied youths, whether Mahratta, Panday, or Sikh, who are now in danger being tempted by the superior inducements and higher pay of civil life to turn their backs on military service.

BENGAL.

(March 4.)

THE last meeting of the India Legislative Council in Calcutta will probably take place on the 28th inst.

MR. BUCKLAND, Junior Secretary to the Board of Revenue, will take over the duties of the Burdwan Commissionership for a short time until a successor is appointed to Mr. Alexander, the present incumbent, who proceeds to England.

THE Chamber of Commerce held their annual meeting on the 28th ult., when Sir A. Wilson reviewed the work done during the past year in a long and able speech. The report and accounts were duly passed. Mr. James Mackay in an eloquent speech testified to the great services during the past ten years of the retiring chairman, Sir A. Wilson,

ACCORDING to a weekly contemporary, the Viceroy is about to try his hand at pigsticking, and was to have left Calcutta on Friday afternoon, accompanied by his two sons, the Earl of Kerry and Lord Charles FitzMaurice, with Lord William Beresford, for Patkabari, where they were to spend Saturday in the sport, and return to Calcutta on the following day.

THE report of Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Patna Division, on the Durbhunga temple case, which is the grievance of the moment with the Native Press, will be presented immediately to the Bengal Government. The Lieutenant-Governor means to pass orders on it without delay.

MR. WESTMACOTT, Excise Commissioner in Bengal, will shortly proceed on three months' leave, Mr. A. Forbes, Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, acting for him. Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Patna Division, takes nine months' furlough, Mr. C. C. Stevens acting for him; while Mr. C. C. Quinn will officiate for Mr. Stevens as Commissioner of Bhagulpore.

MR. HENRY LEE, C.S., the new Chairman of the Calcutta Municipality, was popular with the Native community of Midnapore, where he has been acting as Magistrate and Collector for some time. He is one of that small class of Bengal civilians who are supposed to have liberal ideas with regard to the rights and privileges of the Natives of India. His appointment has satisfied many Natives, but not those who were eager to see the office of the chairman of the Corporation opened to non-officials.

THE authorities have commenced a case against some influential men living in a village near Mahunipore, the last scene of a robbery of Rs. 32,000, as report says, that but last night another robbery took place within rifle shot of the railway station, and yet the police are supposed to be scouring the district. It is more than half suspected that some European is supplying ammunition to the outlaw. Rumour says that Jhunda is anxious to come in and consult with the leading criminal lawyer here for his defence if caught, but is afraid of being given up for the reward.

THE Maharaja of Kuch Behar is, says the Englishman, certainly to be congratulated on the excellent sport which he has shown to his guests. The latest news informs us that six tigers and eight bison have been accounted for by the party, not including a very large number of pig, deer, and other small game. The sportsmen have just had a long day after rhinoceros, but so far without success, as they were unable to get within shot. In all some eighty elephants have been engaged, from which some idea of the size of the camp can be formed.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Mail announces the death of Mr. James Morris, the Port Officer at Mangalore. He was taken ill suddenly with an attack of paralysis on the 19th ult., and never rallied. He was a most energetic officer, and Government has lost in him an excellent servant. He entered the Government service on 24th July, 1884, and after serving at various ports on this coast was transferred to Mangalore in August last year. He leaves a widow and one child.

THE same paper also states that Mr. A. T. Wilkinson, Resident Engineer, Madras Railway, 4th Division, South West Line, Podanur, and Acting Deputy Chief Engineer, died in Madras, after a short illness, from Bright's disease. He was hardworking, and thoroughly conscientious in all his undertakings, and he always had the interests of the Company at heart. He was much esteemed at the various places where he was stationed.

THE general result of Sir Alexander Rendel's close inspection of the Madras Harbour Works is understood to be that he approves of what has been done so far, and acquiesces in the proposal for an eastern instead of a north-eastern entrance.

THE Governor in opening the annual Fine Arts Exhibition here in Senate House defended the Madras School of Arts against the charge sometimes made that it was not much used. The governor also advocated the opening of a public library in Madras.

GOVERNMENT hopes to be able to lay the foundation-stone of the new public library before leaving for the hills. It will be built by Government on the grounds of the present museum, the building being used for a technical institute and library. Towards the latter a native gentleman gave Rs. 20,000 at the time of the Jubilee.

MR. HANNYNGTON, resident of Travancore, is about to retire from the Madras Civil Service.

BRIGADIER GENERAL FARRINGTON, Adjutant-General of Madras, will vacate that appointment on June 4. Colonel Pearson, late of the Suffolk Regiment, or Colonel Gerald Morton, late of the Warwickshire, will probably succeed him.

BOMBAY.

THE Hon. J. B. Richey, C.S.I., has been permitted to resign H.M.'s Covenanted Civil Service in the Bombay establishment, with effect from March 19.

THE total amount paid into the Bank of Bombay to the credit of the Prince Albert Victor Reception Fund exceeds Rs. 1,990. In addition to this Rs. 12,380 has been promised.

LADY SAKURBAI, wife of Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit, died at nine o'clock last night at Petit Hall, Malabar Hill. She had been suffering from an affection of the lungs, and was confined to her bed since last Saturday. A woman of the gentlest disposition, unvarying courtesy, and of a pious nature, with a heart beating with boundless generosity, Lady Sakurbai had endeared herself to all who came in contact with her or her family. Universal sympathy will, no doubt, be felt for Sir Dinshaw Petit in his sad bereavement.

THE season reports of the Bombay Presidency for the week ending Feb. 25 are summarised in the following general remarks:—"Rain during the week in Shikarpur and one taluka of Hyderabad; more needed in Karachi and the Upper Sind frontier. Late crops generally in one taluka of Karachi damaged by frost, and in two of Shikarpur by locusts. Crops generally in three talukas of Karachi and exotic cotton in five talukas of Dharwar blighted. Standing crops otherwise good, except late jowari in Ahmednagar, and late crops generally in Poona and Satara, which are middling or below the average. Harvesting of late crops progressing in most districts, and cotton-picking in parts of Gujarat, Bijapur, Kathiawar, and Baroda. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in Sholapur and Bijapur. Fodder scarce in two talukas of Khandesh, one of Nasik, and one of Sholapur. Water scarce in two talukas of Khandesh and three of Nasik."

THE following notification appears in yesterday's Government Gazette:—"His Excellency the Governor in Council, considering the lack of interest of the inhabitants of Puntamba, taluka Kopergaon, Ahmednagar District, in municipal administration, is pleased to declare, in exercise of the power conferred on him by section 13 of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Act, 1884, that the provisions of sections 11 and 12 of the said Act are unsuitable to the said municipal district of Puntamba. And in further exercise of the said power the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the said Municipality of Puntamba shall consist of eight nominated commissioners, to be appointed by the Commissioner, Central Division, of whom two shall be officials and six non-officials."

A SHOCKING fatality occurred at the Reversing Station on the Bhoire Ghaut last week. Mr. Barnes, the station-master, it appears went to sleep with a box of sulphur matches in his pocket. By some mischance the matches ignited and set fire to his clothes. Before the unfortunate man could succeed in putting out the flames he was so severely burnt as to render all recovery impossible. As soon as help could be secured he was taken into Lanowlie, where he died on Sunday night. He was buried on Monday morning. Mr. Barnes was an old servant of the company, and he leaves behind him a wife and family.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, PUNJAB, AND OUDH.

There is joy in Lucknow over the Artesian well borings which have been in weary operation there for many months, says the Pioneer. Water has been struck at a depth of 1,200 feet, though only rising at the rate of about six gallons a minute on its first appearance, which was made on Saturday last. Should the hopeful omen culminate in more substantial success, it might perhaps be worth while to utilise the invaluable knowledge gained in the present rather costly experiment by boring a second well with the plant which it is now known the peculiarities of the soil require.

THE proposal to accelerate the East Indian up mail above Allahabad has, the local paper understands, been finally abandoned. It was found that by running it beyond Allahabad, at the same speed as between Allahabad and Howrah, it would be possible to reach Ghaziabad by about 7.30 A.M. instead of 9.30. But this would have involved the exclusion of third-class passengers above Allahabad, and the advantages to compensate for the loss of this paying traffic were not considerable. So that it may be taken that the present mail arrangements will stand as they are, at any rate through the coming summer.

THE locusts which have visited the Punjab, according to Mr. E. C. Cotes, Entomologist, Indian Museum, Calcutta, belong to the species Acridium peregrinum. Starting, it is believed, in Western Rajputana, they have, during the past six months, invaded the whole of North-Western India.

THE promoters of the E.I. Passage Association have proposed to Government, the Lahore paper believes, to undertake some of the trooping. Our contemporary suggested, in view of the frequent accidents to troopers, that Government might save both money and trouble by giving out the annual trooping on contract; and if the E.I. Passage Association could guarantee the necessary accommodation, economy, and safety, their offer would be worthy of as much consideration as others.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 17.

THE INDIAN COUNCILS BILL.

On the consideration of the report of amendments to the Indian Councils Bill, Viscount CROSS said: In moving that this report be now received, I wish to say that I telegraphed to the Viceroy Lord Northbrook's amendment, which I accepted the other day, and he wishes me to state that he entirely approves of that amendment.—(hear, hear).

The report of the amendments was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT DOCKS AT BOMBAY.

Viscount SIDMOUTH asked the Secretary of State for India whether any progress had been made in the construction of Government docks at Bombay since his last statement to the House on that subject, and whether any correspondence with the Bombay Government bearing on the subject could be laid on the table of the House. There could be no doubt that there was pressing necessity for the immediate construction of such docks, owing to the fact that there were no docks available for the repair of large vessels within 2,000 miles of Bombay. He thought that these were very serious considerations, and he believed he could assure his noble friend that all naval men were at one as to the absolute necessity of the work being done. He had, therefore, to move in accordance with his motion for any papers which were available.

Viscount CROSS said this was a matter which had been before the House for some time. It must be borne in mind that the docks were required for Imperial and not Indian for purposes. A correspondence had been going on for some time between the different departments concerned, and the result had not been satisfactory. The Admiralty had sent this answer:—

"The Admiralty are strongly of opinion that a first-class naval dock is required at Bombay, but under the pressure of other claims upon the Government it is not possible at present to allot Imperial funds to cover a share of the cost of the construction of a dock of this nature. It would be inexpedient at the present time to lay any papers on the subject before Parliament."

He might explain that a trust dock was rapidly proceeding, although, perhaps, it would not be so large as was required. He was told this dock would be ready in 1891 if the present rate of progress was maintained. He wished he could say more in reply to the noble lord, but this was as far as he could go.

Viscount SIDMOUTH asked whether the Government would have the power to use the dock if wanted.

Viscount CROSS thought it would be so.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 30.

THE DUMDUM MURDER CASE.

Mr. KEAY asked whether the attention of the Secretary for India had been called to a telegram from Calcutta in the Daily News of the 17th inst. stating that "the discharge of the prisoner in the Dumdum murder case was causing much popular indignation, and was called a miscarriage of justice;" whether the case alluded to was that of a British soldier named Thomas O'Hara, who was tried at the criminal session of the High Court of Calcutta for the wilful murder of a Native named Shaik Soleem, in the cantonment of Dumdum, and who was sentenced to death on February 21 last; whether the presiding judge, the Hon. Mr. Justice Norris, in passing sentence, declared that "he entirely endorsed and accepted the verdict or the jury," and that the prisoner "had been guilty of about as brutal a murder as ever was perpetrated;" and whether he had any information which would explain the alleged discharge of the prisoner.

Sir J. FERGUSSON: The Secretary of State has seen the telegram in the Daily News referred to. The Secretary of State has no official information on the subject, but from the telegrams in The Times it seems that the case was brought before the High Court of Calcutta for revision in the ordinary way; that it was argued for four days before the Chief Justice and four other judges; that the Court took time to consider their judgment, and subsequently held that there had been a misdirection of the jury and an improper admission of evidence, and that therefore the conviction must be quashed and the prisoner discharged.

Sir W. PLOWDEN asked whether directions would be given that the man should again be put upon his trial.

Sir J. FERGUSSON: Before that could be considered it would be necessary that the Secretary of State should be in possession of a report of the proceedings.

THE DEFENCES OF BOMBAY.

Admiral FIELD asked whether the attention of the Secretary of State for India had been drawn to the remarks made by his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught recently at Bombay, as reported in the Times of Monday last:—

"The recent naval manœuvres had proved exactly what he had expected—namely, that the Bombay defences with their present armament were absolutely useless, and could not oppose a naval attack. In the absence of Admiral Fremantle's fleet in Zanzibar waters, the naval element of defence was quite useless, because the ships were without crews, and had neither gunners nor firemen to enable them to supply the deficiencies of the land defences."

Sir J. FERGUSSON: The Secretary of State has seen the telegram in the Times purporting to be a report of remarks attributed to his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. Arrangements have been made with the War Office for the supply of new armament, and with the Admiralty, subject to the approval of the Treasury, for manning the floating defences.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

The following telegram from the Viceroy, dated Calcutta, March 21st, has been received at the India Office:—

"Financial statement, delivered in the Legislative Council of the Governor-General, by Sir David Barbour, 21st March. Statement shows very satisfactory improvement in the financial position of the Government of India. Accounts, 1888-89, closed with surplus Rs. 37,000. In the revised estimate for 1889-90 the Revenue is taken at Rs. 84,636,000, and the Expenditure at Rs. 82,826,000; surplus Rs. 1,810,000, after providing for famine grant Rs. 1,058,000, being Rs. 600,000 under grant for famine relief and insurance, and Rs. 458,000 on account of loss on protective railways. This very favourable result is explained to be partly due to temporary improvement in opium, partly to general growth of the revenue; only Rs. 200,000 of improvement is owing to increase in the rate of exchange. In the Budget Estimate for 1890-91 the Revenue is taken at Rs. 84,932,000, and the Expenditure at Rs. 84,662,000; surplus Rs. 270,000, after providing for famine grant Rs. 1,032,000, being Rs. 600,000 for famine relief and insurance, and Rs. 432,000 for loss on protective railways. In 1890-91 credit is taken for Rs. 490,000 originally intended to be received from the Local Governments in 1889-90, but this has now been transferred to 1890-91. On the other hand, the Budget Estimate for 1890-91 provides Rs. 892,000 for special defence works, and Rs. 1,361,000 in connection with re-armament, the Chin-Lushai expedition, and preparations for prompt mobilisation in case of need. Opium revenue is taken at Rs. 5,898,000 net. Rate of exchange, 1s. 4-552d., the same as in the Revised Estimate for 1889-90. Additional taxation is imposed on imported spirits, and Indian-brewed beer is subjected to the same duty as imported beer, which together are estimated to produce Rs. 100,000. Improvement in net expenditure in Upper Burma, Rs. 272,000. It is stated, under the usual reserve, that the Secretary of State for India proposes to draw bills for £14,989,000 in 1890-91. The Budget Estimate for 1890-91 provides for capital outlay on railway and irrigation works Rs. 3,750,000, and advances to the extent of Rs. 907,000 for local purposes; but it is anticipated that it will not be necessary to borrow in India in 1890-91. This favourable result is mainly due to the existence of the surpluses in 1889-90 and 1890-91, and to the provision for the reduction of debt in connection with the famine grant. Sir David Barbour states that his warning last year against pessimist views in connection with Indian finance has been justified by the progress during this year, and he anticipates further improvement. At the same time he admits the difficulties and dangers of the future, especially in connection with exchange; and he declares that there is need for economy and prudence, and is altogether opposed to a policy of adventure of any kind."

A TELEGRAM received at Troy House, Monmouth, on Friday morning, states that Lieutenant Edward Somerset, 60th Rifles, has died in Upper Burma, where he has been engaged against the Dacoits. He was the only son of the late General Edward Somerset, and was 24 years of age.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

"Surgeon Colonel" writes to the Pioneer:—The recent closure of furlough to officers of this service tempts me to ask permission to call attention in your columns to the action of the Secretary of State for India, who, by keeping the department below its proper strength, renders it impossible for medical officers to obtain the furlough promised to them as one inducement to the enter the service. The Indian Army List for January, 1890, shows the Bengal Medical Establishment to consist of 356 officers of all ranks, of whom there were:—

In military employment on duty	...	...	133	} 149
In " " on leave	...	...	16
In civil employment on duty	...	...	183	} 207
In " " on leave	...	...	24
Total	...	...	356

The percentage of officers in military employment who are on leave is, therefore, 10·73, of those in civil employment 11·6, and of the whole body 11·2. But we were promised one year's furlough after five years' service, or a percentage of absentees equal to 16·66; and for this to be obtainable, if 133 officers are required for military duty and 183 for civil work of various kinds, the strength of the department should be raised to 380. And it is now, therefore, less by 24 than what it must be if the promises of the Secretary of State are to be kept. At present the number of absentees shows that one year's furlough is only obtainable after an average of about 8½ years' service. It seems absurd that a petty little affair like the Chin-Lushai Expedition, or a scare about an impending war with the mighty kingdom of Portugal, should cause furlough to be denied to the medical officers, both civil and military, of this Presidency; and I fancy I can hear the howl that would be raised if the Staff Corps officers were to have their leave stopped on such grounds: and yet one would think that combatant officers were quite as much required as medical ones even for small expeditions. The next head of the Indian Medical Service might well invite the authorities that be to consider the insufficient strength of his department, and either move the Secretary of State to give him 24 more surgeons, or else withdraw that number from the smaller civil stations and let their places be filled either by uncovenanted officers or by Natives of the assistant surgeon class, who are daily becoming more and more fit for such appointments. He might well do this amongst other things, and try at all events to relieve in some particulars that condition of affairs which obliges nearly every officer of the Indian Medical Service, possessed of feelings of ordinary sensibility, to describe himself as "Mazlum," and by so doing earn the heartfelt thanks of his professional brethren in this country.

SECOND CLASS ASPIRATIONS.

A correspondent of the Pioneer wants to secure "first-class" society on board P. and O. ships while paying "second-class" fare. He says, poor man, that it is very galling to him to be "debarred from going on the poop deck and confined to a small portion forward." He therefore suggests that "Officers of the Civil and Military Service and their families, who travel second-class P. and O. should be permitted to use the entire deck. Of course the first-class saloon would still be reserved for first-class passengers only." It does not seem to have occurred to him that it would be invidious to reserve the proposed boon for Government servants. Official "caste" is bad enough on shore in India, but there is reason to believe of Europeans who are not servants of the State in this country, that it may be said of them, as the Dublin "don" said of undergraduates, that "These also are God's creatures." The correspondent argues that if the concession he advocates "were granted on an extra charge of say Rs. 50 per head I believe many who now object to travel second-class would be willing to do so." But how about the P. and O. Company? If first-class advantages are to be conceded for second-class fares who will care to pay first-class rates? Railway passengers who take second-class tickets do not dream of entering first-class carriages. If the society that they meet with in the second-class compartments is not altogether to their taste they are consoled for contact with inferior beings by the consciousness of having effected a small economy. Similarly on the ocean's wave the exalted being who pays second-class fare should put his dignity for the time being into his pocket, and try to forget that he is a pillar of the State when in the gorgeous East. He cannot both eat his cake and have it.

LORD HARRIS, who left Cairo on Thursday for India, will stay a few days at Aden, whence he will visit the Somali Coast. His Excellency will arrive in Bombay on the 10th prox.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 1890.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.—THE EUROPEAN.

THE Anglo-Indian Press is again calling attention to the unsatisfactory state in which the armies of India in the three Presidencies are as regards the keeping up of regiments to their proper strength. With reference to the European corps the complaint is that the seasoned soldiers, who under the present system are sent home from India yearly, are replaced by half-grown boys, who, we are told, die by hundreds from typhoid fever and other diseases, or help to fill the hospitals and swell the invalid lists. Lord Wolseley, in the remarkable paper which he contributed to Harper's Magazine for February, wrote:—"To somewhat alleviate the evils attendant upon the unfortunate system of boy recruits, Parliament, I rejoice to say, has forbidden any to be sent to India who, if under twenty years of age, have not been one year in the army. Had Parliament gone thoroughly into the matter it would, I think, have fixed that period at two years instead of one. Putting aside altogether the inhumanity of sending immature lads to India, common sense tells us how much wiser and more economical it would be to send there none but trained soldiers." This is being wise after the event. The short service system has had no warmer advocate than Lord Wolseley from the beginning of the experiment, but it is only lately, after the experiment has been tried, that he seems to have discovered that it has its defects, so far as replenishing the battalions in India is concerned. His protest now against immature lads being sent out to the tropics is, as an Anglo-Indian contemporary points out, merely the echo of opinions expressed many times by other officers who have had sad experience of the mortality among recruits in Indian cantonments. "But," says the Pioneer, "the Adjutant-General does not suggest how annual drafts of grown men are to be supplied, and, so long as the present system continues, it is difficult to see whence they are to come. The linked battalions of a regiment in India must supply the numbers required to replace those who have finished their term of service, and, so long as short service is in vogue, the drafts must be mainly composed of youths. . . . If we are ever called upon to engage in a war beyond the Indian frontier, the absence of seasoned soldiers will be seriously felt. By this is not meant men of twenty years' service of the old pattern, but those who have served half that time with the colours. If Lord Wolseley had dealt with this phase of the question, and given some practical hints either as regards a local European army in India, or special recruiting for a longer term of years than now obtains, his article would have possessed more lasting interest than it will derive from the flutter into which it has thrown the War Office." It is, however, of little concern whether the article might have been made of more permanent interest; the concern is, how is the difficulty it refers to to be met? The suggestion of a local European army for India is one which has been frequently put forward of late years by the Anglo-Indian Press, and one which finds many supporters among military men of Indian experience. It may be granted that there would be little difficulty in obtaining good recruits for such a force. The old East India Company's military service was always a popular one, and, if equally advantageous terms were now offered as regards pay and prospects, a splendid body of men could be raised here for special service in the Indian presidencies. But, allowing that Parliament gave its sanction to the enrolment of such a body, there is a difficulty which has to be met at the threshold. The men may be enlisted under all due formalities and stipulations for local service in India only, but should England be engaged in any serious contest out of India can it be doubted for a moment that if seasoned troops were urgently required the first call that would be made would be upon this local force? The argument that it was a force embodied by Act of Parliament for service in India only would be met immediately by a special Act authorising Parliament to make the call—a call which, be it also remembered, the men themselves would only be too willing to respond to with the attractions of "active" service before them. The impossibility of getting over this plain initial difficulty at once disposes of the argument in favour of a Local European Army for India only. But there is an alternative which sooner or later the War Office must fall back upon if the European regiments in India are to be maintained in proper number as regards rank and file and efficiency. Let special inducements be offered to men to extend their service with the colours—special inducements in the shape of enhanced pay and pension. Let men from the Reserves go to India in place of the immature youths—plenty would be ready and willing to do so for certain considerations. "But the expense of the thing! Think of that!" will be the first cry of the economists, who in military and naval matters belong to the penny wise and pound foolish school of administrators. This is where the real difficulty will lie—the expense of such an arrangement. And so matters will be allowed to drift until the shock of some disaster awakens the public mind at home to the shortcomings of a system which sacrifices everything to false economy. "It must not be forgotten," says the Pioneer, "that 70,000 British troops are cantoned in India, and that upon their efficiency great issues depend," but unfortunately it is this very serious fact which is forgotten, or, to use that expressive Hibernicism, "disremembered" at the War Department in Pall-mall. The English army now in India is, no doubt, in a magnificent state of discipline and preparedness, under its gallant head, Sir Frederick Roberts; but its efficiency is being seriously compromised by the present evil system of annually removing from it seasoned soldiers and replacing them with raw youths who would be unequal to the strain of even one year's active campaigning beyond the frontier. Already there is a difficulty in keeping up the battalions to their authorised complement; but the strength of such battalions should not be measured by mere numbers, but by the quality of the rank and file composing them.

THE Commander-in-Chief has approved of the khaki helmet-cover as at present worn by the Royal Artillery in India being introduced generally for British troops in India when khaki is ordered to be worn. This helmet-cover has an imitation pugri sewn on it, and is intended to be worn over the white pugri. Commanding officers of British corps are directed to take the necessary steps for supplying their men with these covers from regimental funds.

THE Muhammadans of the Punjab, represented by the Anjuman-i-Islamiya of Amritsar, contemplate taking steps to ensure that the anti-Congress views of the Mussulmans of the Punjab shall be placed before the British public and Parliament, in refutation of Mr. Bradlaugh's mistaken ideas, picked up in Bombay, that the Muhammadans are not holding aloof from the Congress.

OBITUARY.

DR. JOHN MACPHERSON, Inspector-General of Hospitals (retired), died at his house in Curzon-street, Mayfair, on the 17th inst., in his 73rd year. He entered the service of the East India Company, and landed in Calcutta in 1840 as an assistant-surgeon. After serving first with the horse artillery and subsequently with a Native infantry regiment in Arracan—in returning from which district he was shipwrecked near the mouth of the River Hooghly—he in 1843 became civil surgeon of Howrah, in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, and three years later was appointed assistant-surgeon of the European General Hospital in Calcutta. In 1846, during the first Sikh war, he was suddenly ordered up to the front, where there was a great scarcity of medical officers, but reached Ferozepore to find that the fighting was over, and his services were required only in the field hospital. He returned to Calcutta, continuing there for the remainder of his stay in India, first in the General Hospital, and afterwards as Presidency surgeon and superintendent-general of vaccination. Having completed twenty-four years of actual service, he retired in the spring of 1864.

COLONEL GEORGE ALEXANDER, Bengal Staff Corps, and late of the Burma Commission, who died suddenly at Mentone, on the 9th inst., at the age of 50, entered the service in December, 1859, became lieutenant in December, 1863, captain in November, 1872, major in December, 1879, lieutenant-colonel in December, 1885, and brevet colonel in December, 1889.

FURTHER and more trustworthy details in regard to the death of Major-General Sir Howard Craufurd Elphinstone, V.C., K.C.B., has been received on the arrival of the New Zealand Shipping Company's steamer Rimutaka, from New Zealand and Teneriffe. The Rimutaka's passengers included Lady Elphinstone, the widow, Miss Elphinstone, the eldest daughter, and Miss Coles, a sister to Lady Elphinstone. At the time the Tongariro left Plymouth with General Elphinstone on board there was a fresh south-west breeze blowing, with a cross sea running. The weather was exceptionally fine, and at about 7 P.M. the wind veered around to the north-west, which moderated the sea. Shortly after 9.20 Ushant light was reported in sight, and General Elphinstone, hearing that fact, left the saloon and went on to the hurricane deck. For about two hours previous to this the Tongariro had experienced a long westerly swell, and was rolling a great deal. General Elphinstone took up a position on the port side of the chart-house, and entered into conversation with Mr. Pendarves Vivian, formerly M.P. for the Western Division of Cornwall. The Tongariro was then rolling so much that the general and Mr. Vivian found it necessary to hold on the fire-rail by the side of the chart-room. The ship gave another heavy roll, and the portion of the fire-rail by which the general was holding on was carried away. General Elphinstone fell back and made a desperate effort to catch hold of another portion of the rail. Just then the ship went down to leeward, and, being struck on the starboard quarter by heavy waves, made a sudden lurch into the trough of the sea. The decks were very slippery, and General Elphinstone, who was wearing a pair of goloshes, was shot backwards in an instant against the gunwhale chains under the port lifeboat. These, being loose, gave somewhat under the sudden pressure. In a second he was precipitated over the chains into the water. An alarm was raised by Mr. Vivian and the fourth officer, who witnessed the occurrence. The life buoys with patent lights were thrown, boats lowered, and the ship stopped. The boats diligently searched for over five hours, but no trace of the general could be found.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Surgeon-General, Madras, is no longer permitted to migrate to the hills with the headquarters of the Madras Government at public expense.

THE next movement in connection with the improvement of the Punjab Native States war service troops will be in regularly organising the war service infantry of Bhawalpore and Faridkot as a camel corps.

CAPTAIN R. H. C. TUFNELL, Adjutant of the Madras Volunteer Guards, proceeds to Europe shortly owing to severe illness. Another military officer will probably be appointed in his place almost immediately.

THE appointments of Inspector-General of Military Works and Commissary-General-in-Chief are to carry the rank of Brigadier-General in future, and Colonels Sanford and Badcock, the present incumbents, have been gazetted accordingly.

REPORTS from Indore state that Colonel Buller, Commandant of the Central India Horse and Political Agent in Malwa, contemplates taking one year's furlough shortly, and that Colonel M. G. Gerard, the senior Second-in-Command, is to succeed him.

A COLONEL commanding a British regiment, and one who resembles the Commander-in-Chief in his solicitude for the Soldiers' Institute, lately directed a book to be placed in his men's library "for suggestions and requirements." The result was somewhat startling, the first entry in the volume being—"Wanted a new Colonel."

COLONEL SAUNDERS, Examiner of Commissariat Accounts, Madras, retires from the service about the beginning of next month. His successor has not yet been appointed. Captain H. E. Passy will act till the appointment of a permanent incumbent. Deputy Surgeon-General Farquhar will succeed Surgeon-General Bidie on the latter's retirement during the current year.

A "PRIVATE SOLDIER" writes to the Pioneer:—"I read a few days ago in your paper that the new pattern khaki helmet cover, with imitation puggree, was to be issued to the men gratis, the canteen funds defraying the cost. Now it is very strange that we, all of us in the battalion I belong to, have had to pay 11 annas each for ours." Perhaps someone in authority will kindly explain.

WE (Pioneer) regret to hear of the death of Surgeon Hennessy, of the Medical Staff, at Lucknow, of dysentery, on the 26th inst. Surgeon Hennessy served previously in the Meerut command, and was invalided home last year for the same disease from which he died. The deceased officer only arrived in Lucknow a fortnight ago, took ill a few days afterwards, was removed to hospital, and died very suddenly.

BAND-SERGEANT BAILEY has been sentenced by Court-Martial at Wellington to be reduced to the ranks for assaulting the Rev. O. Dene, Principal, Secretary, and Chaplain of the Lawrence Asylum, Ootacamund. The sentence has been confirmed by General Faunce, commanding the Southern District. Prisoner pleaded guilty, and the Court recommended him to mercy. Bailey was in charge of the Lawrence Asylum band.

FROM the 1st of April the Post Office Department in the Punjab undertakes the payment of pensions to Native military pensioners. Payment is to be made monthly at the Post Office nearest to their homes, and in many cases at their doors. This is a great improvement on the past system of paying pensioners half-yearly at a large military centre where pensioners had to assemble, travelling long distances and at great cost. Every little helps towards making military service more popular.

THE following is from the Civil and Military Gazette:—"Several medical changes take place shortly. Brigade-Surgeon Maunsell is going early in March to Lucknow to succeed Brigade-Surgeon Hamilton, proceeding on four months' furlough to Europe. Brigade-Surgeon Charles Churchill goes to Murree from Peshawur, and it is rumoured that Deputy Surgeon-General Hoysted will leave Peshawur before long, and be stationed at Umballa. General satisfaction is expressed by the medical staff in India that Surgeon-General Thompson's time has been extended, as it is believed that he has the well-being of the department at heart."

THE VOLUNTEER RESERVES.

The following Observations and Resolutions have been published by the Government of India in the Military Department:—

OBSERVATIONS.—In April, 1885, sanction was given to the formation of Volunteer Reserves in the North-Western Provinces, and Local Governments were asked to submit proposals for the organisation of similar forces in their respective provinces. In May, 1887, the proposals of the Bengal Government for the raising Volunteer Reserves in Bengal, and those of the Bombay Government for the formation of Volunteer Reserves in Bombay and in connection with the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Volunteer Corps, were approved. In the beginning of 1888 sanction was also given to the organisation of Volunteer Reserves in Burma, and in September, 1888, to the formation of Volunteer Reserves in the Madras Presidency. In September, 1888, the Punjab Government reported that steps were being taken to ascertain the number of persons in the province who were fit to be Volunteers, and the proportion of these already enlisted in the Volunteer or Reserve forces. Subsequently Local Governments were requested to furnish, for the information of the Government of India, reports showing the progress made. The reports which have been received show that Reservists in the following numbers have been enrolled in the various provinces:—

Bengal	Calcutta ... ..	462
	Bhagalpur ... ..	20	(a)
	Muzaffarpur ... ..	30	(a)

	Tennasserim Division ... ..	38
	Irrawaddy Division ... ..	69
Total ... ..		2,258

(a) These are said to be expected to join.

Resolution.—The Governor-General in Council observes with satisfaction the progress made in this important matter, and desires to record the acknowledgments of the Government of India to the Local Governments and Administrations, and to the Volunteer Corps concerned, for their efforts in furthering the Volunteer Reserve movement. From a comparison, however, of the number of available men in the various towns and districts of India with the numbers already enrolled as Volunteers or Reservists, it is evident that the Volunteer Reserve Force might be considerably augmented, and his Excellency in Council trusts that Local Governments and Administrations will give their earnest attention to this matter, and endeavour to increase existing Volunteer Reserve Corps and companies, and to raise new corps and companies where none at present exist. His Excellency in Council also desires that Local Governments and Administrations will impress on the civil officers under their orders, and on officers commanding Volunteer Corps, the necessity for taking a personal interest in the movement, as it is one to which the Government of India attach great importance.

THE SOUTH-EAST MYSORE GOLD COMPANY (LIMITED).—A circular from the chairman of this company, dated March 21, states:—"The directors are pleased to be able to inform the shareholders that they have secured the services of Messrs. John Taylor and Sons as managers and consulting engineers of the company, and that Mr. John Garland has been appointed secretary. The offices have been removed to 6 and 7, Queen-street-place, E.C."

That Antæus of periodicals—Colburn's United Service Magazine, has proved itself strong to conquer all manner of vicissitudes and some misfortunes. It is now, however, about to take a new lease of life, which we hope may be a long one. With the 737th number—with a new editor and new proprietor—but the same publishers—Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., it commences a fresh era in the history of the oldest established Service Magazine in the world. It will drop the honoured name of Colburn (under which it has worked so long in the interests of military and naval readers), and as the United Service Magazine make its claim to further support. It has been decided to treat not only of questions concerning all branches of Her Majesty's Land and Sea Forces, but of all questions affecting National Interest and National Defence. The new (April) number will contain signed articles from the pens of, among others, Sir Charles Dilke; Admiral of the Fleet Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby; Colonel Maurice, R.A.; Professor Military History, Staff College; Sir George Baden-Powell, and Lord Wantage. The price will remain the same, viz., one shilling

THE net amount of Indian sea and land customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue, for the first ten months of the current financial year, has reached Rs. 1,05,51,000, as compared with Rs. 92,35,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

THE Government of India has been pleased to grant a bonus of Rs. 4,200 to Mr. M. S. N. Hecquet, Honorary Assistant Engineer, North-Western Railway, in recognition of his eminent services rendered by him in the construction of the "Lansdowne Bridge" across the river Indus at Sukkur.

THE Maharaja of Sikkim enjoys a total revenue of Rs. 8,444 a-year, out of which his Highness gets as much as he can take; then his dependents and pensioners are paid, then something is allowed for the preservation of the forests and the maintenance of the roads, and only the remainder is available for "reproductive public works."

MR. WOODVILLE, of the Graphic, is engaged at Hyderabad on a large oil-painting of an equestrian group consisting of the Nizam, the Minister, and of the late Major Afsur Jung.

IN consequence of the criticisms of the Press on the recent case of beheading at Gulburga, the Home Secretary of Hyderabad has recommended the disuse of the present method, and the substitution of the French guillotine, hanging according to the British custom not being approved.

THE thirty-first report of the Alliance Bank of Simla is now ready, and will be submitted at the half-yearly general meeting of the shareholders to be held on the 1st May next. According to the balance-sheet, the gross earnings—including Rs. 15,528 carried forward—amounted to Rs. 303,044, and deducting therefrom the amount for interest on deposits, working and other expenses, and a bonus to the staff, there remains a net profit of Rs. 68,947. This sum has been disposed of as follows :—a dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, Rs. 30,000; reserve fund, Rs. 20,000; doubtful debt fund, Rs. 10,000; and carried forward to next account Rs. 8,947. The Directors state that the working of the branch of the Bank that has recently been opened in Calcutta has confirmed expectations, as a safe and profitable business is already being done, while the prosperity of the whole concern must be satisfactory to the co-proprietors.

IT is reported that the Admiralty have ordered the Admiral of the East Indian station to inspect the various torpedo boats now in Indian waters, and report to them if it is possible that Lascars could be thoroughly drilled and trusted to take charge of the torpedo boats with a competent European torpedo gunner as commander.

IN response to an invitation transmitted through the agent of the East Indian Railway, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce has appointed a sub-committee to meet and confer with General Strachey, during his stay in Calcutta, on the working of the line, with a view, no doubt, to the further improvement of its traffic facilities. This Conference is, of course, quite distinct from that which, as we have already mentioned, will shortly meet to consider the working of the new docks. A contemporary hears that the members of the Chamber's sub-committee are Sir Alex. Wilson, Messrs. Williamson and Petrie, and Mr. H. H. Macleod, of the Bengal Coal Company. A similar invitation has been extended to the Calcutta Trades' Association

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by analysis (organic substances being eliminated), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM,

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1890.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages a PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Gt. Russell St. W.C.

The MILITARY CAREER. A Guide to Young Officers, Army Candidates, and Parents. By Lieut.-General Sir W. BELLAIRS, K.C.M.G., C.B.

"A practical handbook, which may help parents to answer the urgent question, what to do with their boys."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"There is a good deal of useful information combined with much sound advice in Sir W. Bellairs's book. . . . Parents will find in it how commissions are to be obtained, the examinations necessary to be passed and their scope, the cost of outfit, and the amount of private allowance if it is advisable. . . . and detailed statements of all the articles which are necessary for a complete but not extravagant outfit. . . . The author's estimates are perfectly reasonable, and can be safely followed."—BROAD ARROW.

"Sir William Bellairs has omitted nothing likely to be of service either to the young man himself or to his parents or guardians."—MORNING POST.

Demy 8vo. 2 vols. 10s. 6d.

MODERN TACTICS. By Captain H. R. GALL (late 5th Fusiliers).

"Captain Gall's book will be of great value to military students going up for examinations. His style is lucid and simple, and the questions which are appended to each section of the subject are very well chosen."—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

"The style is clear and simple, and the explanations, helped as they are by numerous plans, will no doubt be easily grasped by those for whom they are written."—MORNING POST.

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE YOUNG SOLDIER IN INDIA: His Life and Prospects. A Plain Account of a Soldier's Life in India, for would-be Recruits and Young Soldiers. By H. S.

CONTENTS.—Voyage Out—Barrack Life—Life in Camp and Field—Prospects—Climate—Surroundings—Native Customs.

"It is satisfactory to read such a good account of a soldier's life from one who has experienced it under less favourable circumstances than exist at present."—MORNING POST.

Cabinet Edition. In 6 vols. each 6s. Vol. VI. now ready. HISTORY OF THE SEPOY WAR. By Sir J. W. KAYE. And

HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY. By Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. New Edition (in which the original Third Volume of Sir John Kaye's Work is left out). Revised and Edited by Col. G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.

The sixth volume consists in great part of new matter, narrating the occurrences at some of the principal stations, other than those originally dealt with, during 1857-58. It also contains a new and comprehensive Index.

2 vols. crown 8vo. each 6s.

LIVES OF INDIAN OFFICERS. By Sir J. W. KAYE. (Originally published in 3 vols.) With Frontispiece. Each volume is complete in itself.

One vol. crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE DECISIVE BATTLES OF INDIA, from 1746 to 1849 inclusive. By Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. With a Portrait of the Author, a Map, and Three Plans.

"This work, which has already been before the public in a less condensed form, is the best text-book upon the subject of the conquest of India that we have perused, and may be safely commended to every student who wishes to acquire a full knowledge of that great historical fact from a writer who, in his own words, 'will tell the whole truth without respect of persons.'"—BROAD ARROW.

One vol. crown 8vo. 6s.

FOUR FAMOUS SOLDIERS: Sir Charles Napier, Hodson of Hodson's Horse, Sir William Napier, Sir Herbert Edwardes. By T. R. E. HOLMES, Author of "History of the Indian Mutiny."

"The lives of Charles and William Napier are worth careful study. The essay on Sir Charles Napier is published for the first time, and gives a capital picture of the indomitable old soldier."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human petr?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and it was made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—
J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOL BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Real Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

MRS. FLORENCE STONE, Montague Villa, Queen's Road, High Wycombe, says:—

"I have received great benefit from taking Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. For many months I have had an attack come on four nights out of seven, and lately in the day time as well; but since taking your medicine I have only had one slight attack in a month."

MRS. MARY PRICE, Gronant, near Holywell, says:—

"I had suffered for four years with Asthma. I have been now nine months without any attack. I have been cured by Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. I can never praise it enough."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 14th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 12th March; and from Calcutta to the 11th March.

THE passing of the Railway Bill will possibly be delayed, as it has been found necessary at the last moment to make a further reference to the Home authorities.

EXECUTIVE orders by the Government of India regarding the police reorganisation question will probably be issued within the next few weeks to Local Governments.

AN impression has prevailed in some quarters that a Minister for Education in India is likely to be appointed. Not the least ground exists for such an assumption.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT were entertained on the 8th inst. at a farewell dinner by the Yacht Club in Bombay.

THE Governor of Madras, accompanied by Mr. Rees, has visited the Eurasian settlement at Whitefield, Sausmond, near Bangalore.

GENERAL GALBRAITH, commanding the Umballa district, proceeds on six months' leave in April.

COLONEL JOHN BIDDULPH, now on leave, succeeds Colonel G. H. Trevor as Commissioner of Ajmere, joining the appointment in the middle of April.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL FARRINGTON, C.B., Adjutant-General of Madras, will vacate that appointment on the 4th of June. Colonel Pearson, late of the Suffolk Regiment, or Colonel Gerald Morton, late of the Warwickshire, will probably succeed him.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BADCOCK, Commissary-General-in-Chief, proceeds to Quetta shortly to inspect the reserve of food supplies there stored in connection with the mobilisation scheme.

MR. W. YOUNG, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, will officiate on the High Court Bench of the North-West Provinces when Mr. Justice Tyrrell goes home on six months' leave.

MR. W. C. BENETT, Judicial Secretary to the North-West Provinces Government, gave over charge of that office on the 10th inst. to Mr. J. B. Thomson, who officiates in it while he acts for Sir Edward Buck as Secretary in the Agricultural Department. Sir Edward and his successor were to have made a trip together on forest business to the Dun; but the former is unwell, and it is therefore possible that Mr. Bennett may have to go direct to Calcutta to take over charge there.

COLONEL HENRY WYLIE, Political Agent, Bhopal, will probably take a year's furlough shortly.

MR. F. H. McLAUGHLIN resigns the Bengal Civil Service from March 25th.

MR. A. PHILLIPS, Standing Counsel for the Presidency of Fort William, is granted leave from the 4th inst. to Nov. 29th. Mr. R. L. Upton, Solicitor to Government, goes on leave for eight months from the 21st inst., Mr. W. K. Eddis officiating.

MR. LUKS, Director of Construction in the Telegraph Department, proceeds to England on eighteen months' furlough in May. Mr. Pitman will probably officiate for him.

MR. T. C. HICK, the Forest officer who was badly mauled by a tiger in the Central Provinces the other day, is progressing very favourably.

MR. BUYERS, the Engineer in charge of the Mu Valley Railway, goes on leave shortly preparatory to retirement.

THE Koladyne river has been fixed as the boundary between Bengal and Burma.

PRESSURE has been lately brought to bear upon the three offending sections of the Orukzai tribe on the Kohat-Thull border with a view to the fines levied upon them being realised. It is now believed that these will be paid without the necessity of enforcing them by an expedition, though the matter is not yet finally settled.

THE Kalka-Simla Railway scheme is now under consideration in the Financial Department, which will settle what should be the nature of the guarantee to be granted to the company if their proposals seem generally acceptable.

THE influenza epidemic has reached India. Many persons all over the country have been attacked by the malady.

SIR GEORGE GREAVES, successor to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, arrived in Bombay on the 12th inst., and subsequently took over command.

H.M.S. Boadicea, with Rear-Admiral Sir Edward Fremantle on board, has returned to Bombay.

THE HON. SIR F. FORBES ADAM, C.I.E., having resigned his seat as an Additional Member of the Bombay Legislative Council, Mr. A. F. Beaufort has been appointed to succeed him. Rao Bahadur Mahadeo G. Ranade, C.I.E., and Mr. Javerilal Yajnik have also been appointed Additional Members of the Council.

THE Bombay Mill Owners' Association has been advised by their Committee after consideration, that all mills should be closed eight days in each month for the present in consequence of the glut in the market.

GENERAL STRACHEY and Sir Alexander Rendel are now on their way from Delhi to Bombay.

ONLY three posts, namely Lungleh, Thamrunah, and Darjow Klang will be held on the Lushai Border this hot season.

THE Government of the Nizam of Hyderabad has decided to maintain twelve students in England at stipends of £300 per annum.

A SERIOUS epidemic of fever has broken out in Monghyr.

THREE Bengal regiments are to be withdrawn from Upper Burma this spring, the Native garrison of the thirteen battalions being considered sufficiently strong.

AN Agricultural Conference will be held at Simla in October.

H.M.S. Troopship Malabar arrived in Bombay from Malta on the 10th inst. with the Border Regiment and details on board.

PRIVATE O'HARA, convicted of murder at Dum Dum, has been acquitted on an appeal to the High Court.

INFLUENZA is reported to have broken out in a severe form at Lucknow.

MAJOR-GENERAL R. H. MONTMORENCY has arrived at Allahabad, and taken over command of the division from Sir John Hudson.

A PAPER, entitled "Is the Preservation of the Industrial Arts of India Possible," will be read before the East India Association by C. Purdon Clarke, Esq., C.I.E., on Wednesday afternoon, April 23rd. The chair will be taken by Sir George Birdwood, K.C.I.E.

NOTES.

THE news from India to-day is generally of a pleasant character, for it tells of peace and prosperity. It is true that the Chin-Lushai business has not yet been settled, but it promises soon to be so; and Upper Burma is gradually but surely settling down to quietude and good behaviour. The Finance Minister having been able to bring in a Budget which is deemed satisfactory by all parties except the Local Governments, who want a refund of their loans, has caused all India to rejoice, and even Calcutta has forgotten for the moment to blaspheme against the Simla exodus.

To have made a journey which "from beginning to end has been one prolonged course of delight and instruction" is not the experience of many travellers, no matter where or when they have roamed. But it has been the happy experience of Prince Albert Victor, as stated by himself in bidding India farewell. This he did in a modest, graceful speech, in which he said that he had accepted the cordial greetings and hospitalities which everywhere met him as proofs of goodwill and affection towards the Queen-Empress, and of loyalty towards the British rule.

THE departure of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the arrival of General Sir George Greaves, the Duke's successor in the command of the Bombay Army, were the chief local events of the week the mail left. The Duke, on the day before his departure, received a deputation from the Deccan, who asked his sanction for a scheme for instituting a Native military college as a memorial of his connection with the Bombay Army. If the consent of the Supreme Government is given to the scheme, effect will be given to an idea which has been under discussion for many years. Their Royal Highnesses, who are coming home by China and Japan and Canada, have left behind them many pleasant recollections, for they were universally popular.

IN speeding the parting Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army and welcoming his successor the Bombay Gazette says that recognition must be taken of the services which have been rendered alike to the retiring Commander-in-Chief and to the army by the officers who were on the Duke of Connaught's staff. "In Colonel Cavaye, his military secretary, his Royal Highness has had a very able assistant, whose unflinching tact and kindness have contributed in no small degree to the success of the command. How much the smooth working of the administrative machinery of an army depends upon the headquarters staff need not be pointed out, and in his staff the Duke has been particularly fortunate. All of them—Colonel Cavaye and Colonel Beecher, the Duke's equerry, and Captains Herbert and Fergusson—have been exceedingly popular in Poona and Bombay society, and they will be greatly missed."

IN a few words of soldierly banter, says the same paper, the retiring Commander-in-Chief pointed the moral of the attack on the Bombay Defences, which was followed with so much interest by the population of the city. His Royal Highness, when speaking at the Yacht Club, stated that the experiment of putting the defences to the test of attack had completely satisfied his expectation, and demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of everyone that the armament of the batteries is so insufficient as to be practically useless. The land defences could not resist a naval attack, and the naval element is rendered equally useless by the absence of crews to work the gun-boats and torpedo boats, even the very stokers having to be borrowed for the occasion from one of H.M.'s ships that happened to be in harbour. His Royal Highness indulged in the hope that now at length the remonstrances so often in vain addressed to the Secretary of State would receive attention, and the necessary armaments provided, so that the costly batteries which had been constructed may be rendered available for the defence of the city and the torpedo boats and gun-boats supplied with men to work them.

THE Pioneer says:—"We should be very slow to credit the reports that the Uncovenanted Service have declined the offer of a fixed rate of one and eightpence for the payment of their furlough and pensions. There may be many members of the service who hold to the strictly logical view that if the Government concedes anything it is bound to concede the full two shillings for the rupee; but it is certain that there must be numbers—probably a large majority—who believe that one and eightpence is the best they will get, and a great deal better than they could have expected. That being so there is no person or body of persons who could undertake to answer in the name of the service what will be accepted or refused. The proposal must be brought forward publicly by the Government, and then it will be time for the dissentients to decline—if any will decline—to have their prospects materially improved out of a feeling that they may at some future time be still further bettered. Possibly the Government might link the one-and-eightpenny rate with some conditions that would make it final as regards the acceptor; but at present the only thing at all certain is that the rate has approved itself to the India Office."

THE scale of the Simla travelling allowances as finally fixed is a double first-class fare by railway and eight annas per mile by road for officers drawing Rs. 1,500 per month and upwards, and a similar grant for those between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,500, plus Rs. 150 for a wife and each child over 12 years of age, and Rs. 65 for each child under 12—subject to the proviso that the aggregate for an officer and his family is not to exceed Rs. 650. For officers holding appointments from Rs. 100 to 500 the terms are a double second-class fare and four annas per mile by road with proportionate grants per family, the whole not to exceed Rs. 450. Those with salaries from Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 will be granted the fixed sum of Rs. 100 for each journey, and those below Rs. 50 a double intermediate fare and four annas a mile by road. In each of these two last classes the aggregate for the officer and family is not to exceed Rs. 350.

WE reprint to-day a very able review from the Athenæum of Tavernier's "Travels in India." Anglo-Indians will have little difficulty in recognising the Roman hand of the reviewer as belonging to one who has done much to create where it did not exist, and to foster where it did, an interest in the India of past days, its art, its industries, its records, and its literature. His notice of this reproduction of Tavernier's book is well timed, and should stimulate enterprising publishers to bring out reprints of the works of other of the seventeenth century travellers to the East.

MR. H. J. S. COTTON, the author of New India, who was not long ago the idol of educated Natives, and preached the abolition of all sorts and manners of race distinction, has now, as one of the secretaries to the Bengal Government, "confirmed," says the Indian Mirror, "the promotions of certain clerks in his department, involving the supersession of some, on racial grounds." The leading Native paper in Calcutta, which was one of Mr. Cotton's zealous admirers not many months ago, now advises him "to bring out a new edition of his book." Mr. Cotton has probably found out that to practise in office what one preaches in the cold shades of opposition is not a very easy task.

Indian Engineering says:—"It does not speak well for the administration of the P.W.D. in Burma that comparatively young and inexperienced officers are placed in charge of such large divisions as Meiktila and Myingyan in Upper Burma, while more experienced officers hold perfect sinecures, such as the Amherst and Tharrawaddy divisions, where hardly anything is going on beyond repairs. These officers might be more usefully employed in Upper Burma on irrigation works that would yield good revenue, and their divisions handed over to assistant engineers or experienced upper subordinates."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 30.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Friday a motion that the Excise Amending Act be passed gave opportunity for a debate on the Budget, in which most of the members took part. The Hon. Mr. Nulkar, a Native gentleman from Bombay, opened the discussion. After complaining of the meagreness of the information given regarding home charges, he proceeded to comment with some severity upon the claims of the European uncovenanted servants to be paid pensions in sterling at a rate of exchange more favourable than the market rate. He also suggested an early reduction of the salt duty and more stringent restrictions on the sale of spirits.

Sir Alexander Wilson, representing the Calcutta mercantile community, followed. There was, he said, a general feeling of satisfaction at the sound and prosperous state of the finances as disclosed by the Budget, but he regretted to find no defined policy put forward with regard to the future construction of railways, and he feared, unless some defined policy was laid down, that the patience of promoters and capitalists would be exhausted before any of the schemes proposed were adopted. He added that the Bengal Chamber of Commerce fully agreed with the Finance Minister in thinking that the Government balances ought not to be made available to the public in furtherance of trade.

The Hon. Mr. Evans, non-official member, while congratulating Sir D. Barbour on his Budget, asked whether he was prepared to refund the contributions exacted last year from the provincial Governments, with the result of considerably crippling their resources. He also pointed out that, having regard to the heavy taxation of justice and to the fact that in Bengal alone the civil Courts gave a surplus of 14 lakhs of rupees over their cost, a larger amount ought to be spent in increasing the number and improving the efficiency of the subordinate tribunals.

Sir Charles Elliott, Public Works Minister, described the manner in which it was proposed to appropriate Rs. 3,75,00,000, which would be devoted to railway and canal construction during the coming year. The first item was a sum of Rs. 55,00,000 to be spent on irrigation canals in the Punjab, the North-West Provinces, and Madras. Then came Rs. 70,00,000 on extending and improving existing State railway lines then Rs. 1,84,00,000 on finishing railways already begun, of which the principal one was the Villapuram-Guntaha line in Madras. It was also proposed to spend about Rs. 50,00,000 on the military lines now in progress, and about the same amount on the extension of the railway system in Burma. It was not, he said, the policy of the Government to encourage the system of employing guaranteed companies of the old class, because, if the Government could raise the whole of the capital required at 3 per cent. on their own credit, it was unnecessary to ask a company to borrow for it at 3½ or 4 per cent. He could, however, mention two companies which afforded an admirable example of genuine private enterprise, where the shareholders asked no guarantee from the State, but trusted to the productiveness of the country and to economy in making and managing their lines. These were the Bengal and North-West and the Delhi and Kalka Companies.

The Indian Government was anxious to encourage to its largest possible extent private enterprise of this kind, subject to certain broad principles which must govern the selection of projects and the sanction without which they could not be started. These principles were, first, to aim at having a few large companies rather than many small ones; secondly, that every railway which had been started should have a prior right of supplying the whole of the tract which it served; thirdly, that the metre gauge should not be introduced into a broad gauge country unless the probable traffic was very light; and, fourthly, that a company should not be allowed to take up only the best and most remunerative part of a large scheme.

The Hon. Rajah Durga Chara Laha made a few remarks on the famine grant, which he suggested should be described simply as the reserve fund.

The Hon. Syed Ameer Hossein thought that incomes of under Rs. 1,000 should be exempted from income-tax.

The Lieut.-Governor of Bengal complained that the Bengal Government had been put to much difficulty last year by being required to contribute ten lakhs from provincial funds, and thought that the money ought to be given back now that there was a large surplus.

The Hon. Mr. Hutchins gave some particulars as to the increase recently sanctioned in the number of subordinate tribunals in Bengal.

Sir David Barbour then replied at some length. He did not think it necessary that the contributions taken from the provincial Governments should be restored. In his opinion the Supreme Government should never interfere with a provincial contract so long as it could avoid doing so. The provincial Governments should resist such interference as long as they could fairly do so, but when interference had once taken place the account should be treated as closed and no reversal permitted. After briefly answering some other criticism, he referred to a fact which had been attracting some attention—namely, that before the Budget was published information as to the intention of the Government not to raise a loan, but to increase the duty on imported spirits, had somehow got abroad. It was, he said, impossible to discover how this happened, but in the present case he believed no harm had resulted.

The debate closed with a speech by the Viceroy. He began by expressing the hope that the Bill now pending in Parliament would remove the difficulties hitherto experienced in submitting the Budget to discussion in the Indian Legislature, and described Lord Cross's measure as marking one of the greatest advances made for many years past in the direction of liberal reform. Referring to the complaints that there was no remission of taxation, he said the time for such a step had not yet come. The Government had no right to abandon revenue until it was reasonably certain that it would be possible to dispense with that revenue, even if prospects were better assured than he believed them to be. The Finance Minister deserved support in his determination to give the first place, not to small remissions of taxation, but to the restoration of the annual provision against famine. He thought Lord Dufferin's Government exercised a wise choice in preferring a temporary suspension of that arrangement to additional taxation, but it was their first duty when affairs looked more promising to revert to the sound policy instituted by their predecessors.

Turning, then, to examine that portion of the Budget which deals with the public debt, he showed that a large portion of that debt represented expenditure upon remunerative enterprises, for which the State obtained a fair return, or had valuable assets to show—a fact to which, he added, they could look with unqualified satisfaction amid much that was doubtful and precarious. The accounts of the closing year, he went on to say, were also most gratifying in the proof they afforded of the continuous and rapid improvement in the revenue of Upper Burma. He alluded briefly to the Chin-Lushai expedition, which had cost more than was expected, but the money was well laid out, as it was absolutely necessary that the country should be pacified. The operations, he said, had been carried out with the greatest skill and courage, and, but for a large amount of sickness in a singularly malarious country, had been conducted at scarcely any cost in casualties, while there was every reason to believe that they would prevent any recurrence of the outbreaks.

Prince Albert Victor's Indian tour closed on Friday, when he left Bombay by the mail steamer Assam. During the early part of the week he took part in a number of public functions, including laying the foundation-stone of the new Leper Hospital. Wednesday was observed as a general holiday, and the city was illuminated in the evening, but, unfortunately, slight indisposition prevented the Prince from witnessing the sight. Next day he quite recovered, and attended a dinner given by the Byculla Club. Replying to the toast of his health, he spoke feelingly of the pleasure that his visit to India had given him. Wherever he had been in India, he said, men in every walk of life, all hard worked and with little leisure for pageants, had welcomed him with the lavishness and grace of the East and the sincerity of the West. Merchants had not grudged their golden hours, nor civil and military officers their scanty leisure, to make him feel at home in this strange, great country, and he must now say how touched and delighted he was, and how the generous hospitality of his fellow-countrymen would always linger in his memory. It was all reflected glory, it was their patriotic love for their good Queen-Empress, and their attachment to his father which won him this splendid and Royal welcome; but young as he was, he was old enough to know how sincere and how valuable to the Empire were those sentiments. He should never forget that India was a pleasant and happy country; she was so by reason of the enterprise of her merchants, the honour of her civil servants, and the devotion of her soldiers and Volunteers.

As Prince Albert Victor embarked a farewell address was presented by the Corporation, in reply to which he expressed regret at leaving this intensely interesting country after a most enjoyable tour. His expectations, he said, were more than realised, and he was deeply impressed by, and thoroughly interested in, all he had seen. The welcome he had received from all classes had proved how unanimous was the loyalty and devotion to the Throne and to the person of the Queen-Empress. He had no doubt that the great port of Bombay would go on increasing in commercial prosperity and impoitance. He took this opportunity of expressing his heartfelt gratitude to the entire population of India for their generous and kindly treatment, and in bidding farewell he hoped that India might continue to prosper under the beneficent rule of the Queen-Empress.

The report that Mr. Bradlaugh intends to propose the introduction of the elective principle as an amendment to Lord Cross's Indian Councils Bill has excited much alarm among the Mahomedans, and they are actively bestirring themselves to represent their views to Parliament. The petition prepared by the Mahomedans of Aligarh, a summary of which was telegraphed to the Times a fortnight ago, was despatched by the last mail. The first batch of signatures amounted to 838, and fresh signatures are now pouring in rapidly. The Central Mahomedan Association of Calcutta, and its fifty-two branches in all parts of India, are about to submit a strong united protest against the proposed innovation, and as that association includes all the leading Mahomedans its views should carry great weight. The Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta has passed a resolution to the same effect. A number of local associations in the Punjab and elsewhere are also preparing petitions.

There can be no doubt that the other communities which are in the minority, such as the Christians, Parsees, Sikhs, and so on, with the exception of a few individuals in each, are equally united in objecting to the principle, which would infallibly result in their political extinction. Even among the Hindoos, the only friends of representative institutions are the small body of agitators and wire-pullers of the National Congress; the mass of the people are profoundly indifferent, and the aristocracy and Orthodox party regard the proposal with decided dislike.

The Viceroy leaves Calcutta this evening. Most of the members of the Council and their secretaries have already left for Simla. The meeting of the Legislative Council last Friday closed the Calcutta session. The consideration of the Factories Bill has been postponed till next winter, the Government being of opinion that there is no pressing necessity for the measure.

The Chinese Amban left Calcutta yesterday for Darjeeling, en route for Lhasa. He is said to have been much pleased and impressed by all he saw during his visit.

A great fire occurred at Simla last week. A large part of the bazaar was burnt down and considerable damage done.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 30.

The Ameer was to have gone to Herat last week, but it is now said that he is returning direct to Cabul.

Reports have been current regarding disturbances at Candahar, but no news of them has reached Quetta.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, MARCH 30.

The columns from Fort White and Kalembo drove the Chins from the positions they occupied on the Letha range. Some petty skirmishing occurred and one Goorkha havildar was wounded.

The political officer in the northern Chin hills reports that Major Gordon-Cumming was probably killed by the Burman Chins whose village was burnt last week.

Brigadier-General Symons has despatched 350 hill coolies from Haka to Tao, a village 44 miles distant, to bring in the wing of the 4th Goorkhas which was despatched by Colonel Tregear to garrison Haka. The troops are being rapidly sent down from Haka.

The commissariat, who have hitherto been fully occupied in feeding the troops, have begun storing supplies at Haka for the garrison. Brigadier-General Symons reports that the Hakas display great disinclination to surrender the captives they took in a recent raid. Some captives who were seized some years ago and who were surrendered by the Chins refuse to leave, preferring to remain with them.

The correspondent of the Rangoon Times at Haka states that of 500 Scottish Borderers who joined the force only 160 are left at the front, of whom twenty have been declared unfit for hard work. Six officers of the regiment have been invalided.

Exaggerated reports have been circulated relative to the condition of the tinned food supplied to the Burma column of the Chin-Lushai field force. The total quantity of tinned food condemned only amounted to 1,000lb. weight. This food was condemned by the commissariat officer before being supplied to the troops, because the tins were injured in transport. The London dock strike prevented fresh supplies of tinned food from reaching Burma before the commencement of the expedition.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 30.

News about the Chin-Lushai force is now almost entirely confined to accounts of surveys and the construction of roads and telegraph lines.

The withdrawal of the greater part of the force is now proceeding, and a large portion of the Chittagong column will embark for India early next month.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 30.

A great portion of the towns of Meiktela and Magwe, in Upper Burma, were destroyed by fires last week.

The Mandalay Herald announce that the Tsawbwa of Thebaw has left his territory, and disappeared. It is suggested that he has gone to Moulmein to proceed to England and personally seek redress from the Queen. His grievance is understood to be that the local Government refuse to allow him to work the forests in his territory and export timber. The local Government are reticent on the subject, but intelligence from other sources confirms the statement that the Tsawbwa has left his territory and that considerable excitement prevails there, and some insurrectionary movement is probable. If the cause assigned for his action be correct, the Tsawbwa's complaint appears to be unfounded. The Government, when granting sunnads to the Shan Tsawbwas, expressly reserved to themselves in every case the forests and the minerals. The action of the Tsawbwa of Thebaw has excited much attention. He is the most powerful of the Northern Shan chiefs, and has been the warmest supporter of British rule. Since the annexation of Upper Burma he has received marked honours and a considerable increase of territory in recognition of his services. He was generally regarded as the most reliable and steadfast adherent to our rule among the Shan chiefs.

The ex-King of Burma took his title from the capital of this chieftain. Some years ago the Tsawbwa of Thebaw, who was in disfavour with the Burmese Government, sought refuge in British territory. While in Rangoon he killed two of his servants. He was tried for the offence and sentenced to be hanged, but after a time received pardon.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

A PUNJAB MILITIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Now that Government has had such marked success in its experiment with the armies of the Native States, the time has come to insist that a very economical means of increasing our defensive military resources shall no longer be neglected. In times of trouble it has been a common practice for the Deputy Commissioner to call out loyal Zemindars and use them as militia. This was done in more than one district in 1857. Such Zemindars, though loyal and willing, are not efficient. They do not know the use of modern weapons. What we want is a local militia. The Deputy Commissioner might be made Colonel, to make him take an interest in the scheme, but there would, of course, be a commandant and adjutant to do the drilling. The men could be called out for a month before Christmas and for a fortnight in June, when there is little or no field work. The men could be paid for the six weeks they were out, and could be officered by local Native gentlemen. A gentleman who brought a certain number of horsemen might be made a Ressaldar, one who brought a lesser number a Jemadar. So with the infantry, and the appointment of Subadars and Jemadars. The commandant and adjutant might go round the villages all the year round, and give instruction in riding and drill without arms to any men in the immediate neighbourhood. Tent-pegging and lime-cutting could be practised all the year round, and be superintended by the officers as they went round the district. The Woordi Major would be an old soldier. A certain number of old soldiers should be enlisted as a nucleus, and a large proportion of the non-commissioned officers should also be men from the regular army.

Service in such a militia would be immensely popular. Native gentlemen and yeomen in the Punjab often express their regret that the martial spirit of their ancestors is dying out. They say that their sons, never having had arms in their hands, must grow up effeminate and unwarlike. The men of the militia would be able to farm and do their work just as well as before. They would bring their supplies for the most part to the camp from home, and their pay would be almost all so much hard cash—a great help to them when revenue has to be paid. Many districts in the Punjab could turn out with ease a squadron of cavalry, a couple of hundred mounted infantry, and a thousand infantry or so. They would not be very smart, but they would know how to shoot and go through simple manoeuvres. They would be quite good enough to deal with any local trouble and to do garrison duty if all the regular troops were wanted for the first line. Many of the men would after a short service in the militia wish to join the Regulars. The militia would thus become a recruiting-ground for the army. In a year's time we might have a serviceable force of thirty thousand Punjab militia, capable of being doubled and trebled on very short notice. Had we had such a force in 1878 it would have been unnecessary to rail up Madras at very great expense to do garrison duty in the Punjab.

It would be advisable to keep the arms at head-quarters. A permanent guard of militia composed of old soldiers could be kept up at the district arsenal all the year round. The expense to Government in each District would be the pay of a commandant, adjutant and, say, an arsenal guard of twenty-five men all the year round; and the pay of, let us say, 120 cavalry, 200 mounted infantry and 1,000 infantry with their Native officers, for six weeks. The time when the militia was called out would be looked on as a fair. It would probably be necessary to make a yearly grant to all efficient for clothing, as is now done with the Volunteers.

It may be said that the idea of a Punjab militia is very much like the Congress scheme for forming corps of Indian Volunteers. It is entirely different. The present proposal is that our sturdy Punjab yeomen should be formed into a militia. The Congress idea is that we should drill and arm a lot of pleaders, merchants, and the like. In England the tradesman or professional man is as plucky a man as the ploughboy or country gentleman. In India there are fighting races and non-fighting races. Most of the members of the Congress belong to the latter. The stall-fed Rajah and Zemindar of the Permanent Settlement, and the son of the Punjab money-lender or shopkeeper, will never fight.

To put arms of precision into the hands of unwarlike men means losing those arms in the time of danger. This has been sufficiently proved in Burma. Old Madras Colonels, in moments of confidence, bitterly regret that they can no longer enlist the old fighting Madras Mussulman, and admit that a very large proportion of their men would never fight. With a good militia the expense of the Madras Native Army might be dispensed with almost entirely. The operations about Gungaw in 1889, especially the retreat from Kan to Gungaw, show what the result of arming men of unwarlike races must always be. Let the Indian pleader, trader, et hoc genus omne, stick to their proper work, and not seek to masquerade as soldiers. It is quite possible for a man to be a good and useful citizen without being a soldier; but if he only makes a bad soldier, he brings discredit on himself and his country. On the other hand, when the Government has solid and trustworthy military resources ready to its hand, let it lose no time in taking full advantage thereof. What we have said above is only a brief preliminary sketch in outline of the scheme of a Punjab militia. There are details to be adjusted, conflicting opinions reconciled, and safeguards agreed upon before the scheme is complete; and we purpose to return to the subject later.

MINERS IN MYSORE.

(Madras Times.)

Within the last week or two we have published sundry papers on the subject of the Kolar Gold Fields. There have been doubts expressed from time to time as to whether these gold fields would continue prosperous. This it is not for us to attempt to decide now, when we have merely to deal with the facts of the present position, as stated by our correspondent. The Mysore State has reaped and is reaping benefits out of the gold mines. Wise administrators, knowing this, will do what is in their power to assist the Mining Companies in all reasonable ways, and will not allow them to drift along by themselves, to form an imperium in imperio, and to develop interests quite separate from those of the State itself. The Mines are worked by British companies, but there is no reason why the Mysore Government should not co-operate cordially, and thus draw closer the bonds that at present depend solely on self-interest. Such bonds are not usually weak, but those are stronger and more reliable that depend on self-interest combined with esteem or respect. Our correspondent, referring to the hospital, makes the suggestive remark that the Mysore Government gives nothing towards its up-keep. The authorities are well within their right. So long as hospital accommodation is properly provided they are not bound to contribute towards the expenses; but as a matter of policy or expediency the present indifference is open to question. Then, again, the proposal that a burying ground should be provided on each camp must strike Europeans as less wise than that which suggests a central cemetery for all. Anything likely to conduce to the binding together of the people assembled about the gold-fields should eventually result in advantage to the State. It appears evident that the miners are imbued with the idea that all the Mysore Government cares about is the Royalty paid by the miners. For the miners it exhibits no care. In other parts of the State aid is given by the Government, and progress is encouraged. In the gold mines, whence comes a large and increasing revenue, the money-makers are left to look after themselves. On the face of it this appears like the reflection of a short-sighted policy. The State may, however, have reasons that are not patent to outsiders. If so, for the sake of its own reputation, it should let the public have a little idea of the principle upon which the present attitude of non-interference is maintained.

Where the present position seems peculiarly open to improvement is in the matter of laws and their application. The want of Magistrates is, as stated by our correspondent, a real want. Enough is said to show that a good case has been established for the transfer of Head-Quarters from Kolar, the nominal chief town, to Marikuppam. Where there are gold mines there will, of necessity, be some crimes and offences. Under good management the percentage of crime may not be very high, but the need for police and magistracy will be felt, and both police and magistrates ought to be close at hand. Kolar seems to rejoice in a strong show of authority, or authorities. Marikuppam, where, we may conclude by any ordinary process of reasoning that the need of some one in authority is more felt, is left without anyone. If, for petty offences, prosecutors have to go 9 or 17 miles to find a magistrate, it may fairly be assumed that many a petty offender escapes scot-free, with an increased inclination to sin again, simply because the person against whom he has sinned does not care to take the trouble involved in a prosecution, and the sinner himself has found this out. Even more important than this want is the need of an amendment in the law relating to gold stealing. Some years ago a Magistrate in Madras was the possessor of some turkeys. He was fattening them up for Christmas-tide, and just before killing day arrived two or three birds were stolen. In the market the police arrested one or two suspected persons offering birds for sale. The man or men could give no satisfactory account of where the turkeys came from, but the prosecution instituted fell through, because the turkeys could not be identified. Some similar foolish ideas seem to guide Mysore legislation. In a district like Kolar similar laws to those obtaining in Australian gold-mining districts should be put in force. Possession that cannot be explained may in such cases be regarded as wrongful possession and as indirect evidence of theft, or of culpable reception of stolen property. Gold, as obtained from the mines, is not to be picked up in the streets; and even though it be impossible to distinguish from which mine a particular lot of gold has come, there should certainly be little difficulty in finding out whether any holder suspected of malpractices can satisfactorily explain how he came into possession of the gold that has given rise to suspicions. If the law be too narrow and too rigid, it must defeat its own object, and favour rather than convict criminals.

MILITARY SERVICE IN UPPER BURMA.

(Mandalay Herald.)

As a rule, the military authorities are more alive to the conditions of military service than civilians are to their sub-ordinates. At present, service in Burma with the Madras troops is not popular for many and obvious reasons, and the matter has engaged the attention of the heads of the military service, who have already apparently made up a scheme as to the future garrisoning of Upper Burma. The Pioneer, generally accurate in its knowledge of official matters, thus gives the details of the scheme under contemplation to provide garrisons for Upper Burma. This paper says that ten battalions of Native infantry of the Madras Army will be localised in Burma. The Native army of Madras at present is composed of thirty-two battalions, eleven of which are in this country. On the disappearance of frontier expeditions the Bengal troops will be sent back when it has been determined to garrison this country with ten Madras Native Regiments. The Pioneer then goes on to say:—

"The cadres of these will be transferred permanently from Madras to Burma, and in process of time the rank and file will consist entirely of men recruited from Upper India. The gradual reduction in the Military Police will set free a number of men of the fighting classes, who will no doubt volunteer for what will really become a local army on the further side of the Bay of Bengal. The Sikhs, Punjabis, Gurkhas, and Hindustanis, who form the bulk of the Police, have taken kindly to the country, and with the special rates of pay which obtain in Burma, they are not likely to refuse the chance of enlistment in regular battalions. The Madras Government have found some difficulty of late years in obtaining good recruits for their thirty-two regiments, and there can be little doubt that men of an inferior stamp have of necessity had to be taken. But with only twenty-two battalions to be maintained in the Presidency itself the recruiting ground should be equal to the demands made upon it, and the army as a whole is thus likely to benefit by the change. It will be seen that no reduction in its strength is contemplated, and the officers of the local Staff Corps will not find their promotion blocked. In fact, such of them as are fortunate enough to be posted to Burma will command men equal to the best Sepoys in the Bengal Army, and service with the ten selected regiments should be much sought after. The military administration of Burma will remain under the direct control of the Commander-in-Chief at Madras, the local establishment being one Major-General and three Brigadier-Generals. With so large an extent of country to be held, extending from Moulmein and Rangoon on the south to Bhamo and Mogoung on the north, the distribution of the garrison into the three brigades seems absolutely necessary."

Our Allahabad contemporary is not quite correct in his geography of Burma, which extends from Mergui in the south, and not Moulmein.

The most important feature of the future scheme to keep Burma supplied with garrison troops is that which determines that future recruitments for what may be called the standing army of Burma shall be made locally. From the tenor of our contemporary's remarks it would seem that future enlistments would be made from the ranks of time-expired Sikhs, Punjabis, Gurkhas, and Hindustanis in the Military Police force. But this, it is to be hoped, will not be strictly true. The Karens and the Nagas have both given great promise; the former as military men and the latter as transport coolies, from which we have no doubt they can develop into hardy Sepoys.

BENGAL.

(March 11.)

EXECUTIVE orders by the Government of India, regarding the police reorganisation question, will probably be issued within the next few weeks to Local Governments.

It is said that cholera has broken out in Monghyr in rather a bad form; but the local authorities are reported to be taking energetic steps to check the spread of the epidemic.

THE Viceroy had a very enjoyable two days' pig-sticking at Sahibgunge, where his Excellency was the guest of Mr. Archie Hills, and returned to Calcutta much the better for his recreation. Eight boars, all strong runners and game fighters, fell to the spears of the party, two being accounted for by the Viceroy, and one by Lord Kerry. The rest are divided between Lord William Beresford and Mr. Hills and his son.

ACCORDING to the Englishman, the Cooch Behar shooting party has been much disappointed by the scarcity of rhinoceros, which is accounted for by the Rydak jungles having been already shot through at Christmas by a party from Jalpaiguri and Buxa. It is said these sportsmen had the use of Cooch Behar elephants, and might, therefore, have selected some other ground than that annually resorted to by the Maharajah. The bag is, however, good—namely, seven tigers, fifteen buffaloes, including six bulls, three of which are magnificent heads; two rhino, and about a dozen big deer—sambhar and barsingh.

SEVENTEEN Babus of Durbhangah have formed a scheme to get a lakh of rupees out of Mr. Beadon, the Collector, and ten of their Mahomedan fellow-citizens. The notice which they have served is a formidable document, with seventeen photographs, beginning "Babu So-and-so, son of Babu So-and-so," on one side of the Versus, and the names and designations of the eleven defendants on the other side. The plaintiffs have had their religious feelings injured by the demolition of the temple in what is known as "The Durbhanagh Case," and will take either "suitable amends" or one lakh of rupees.

MADRAS.

MR. J. C. HORSFALL has been permitted to retire from the Madras Civil Service, with effect from the 26th inst.

THE Government of India has, says the Madras Mail, consented to the refund of the amount expended from provincial Funds by the Madras Government, for the survey of the proposed line for the East Coast Railway, in the event of a company undertaking the construction of the line. The question mooted by the Madras Government as to the superior claim of the Bezwada-Vizianagram section to prior construction has been met by the provision made for the survey of the whole line in one season. The question of the priority of construction of any one section will not, it is said, practically arise till the surveys have been completed.

BOMBAY.

(March 14.)

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR JOHN MACNEIL, V.C., arrived in Bombay from Europe by the last mail steamer.

MAJOR J. HUMFREY has been gazetted Inspector-General of Police, vice Colonel F. J. Wise, deceased.

THE Thakore Sahib of Gondal with his Rani and two children leaves for England on the 21st of March. It is said that he is to leave his son in England to prosecute his studies and to compete for the Civil Service.

A MATHERAN correspondent telegraphs:—The climate on the hill is cool and delicious, with an entire absence of the dry east winds sometimes so prevalent in March. Mathera just now is a grateful and beneficial change from Bombay the hotels are almost empty.

LADY REAY, accompanied by the Hon. Mrs. Childers and another lady friend, paid a friendly visit to Mrs. Ameerudin Tyabjee at her residence in Khetwady on the 4th inst. Lady Sassoon, Lady Thompson, Mrs. Scott and several other European ladies, and also the ladies of the Tyabjee family, were invited to meet her ladyship, who expressed great satisfaction and pleasure in having an insight into the habits and customs of the Mahomedan purda ladies of Bombay.

THE result of the balloting at the Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday for three Elective Trustees of the Port of Bombay, in place of the Hon. Sir Frank Forbes Adam, Kt., C.I.E., and Messrs. H. W. Uloth and S. D. Sassoon, who retire on the 31st inst., was that the undermentioned gentlemen were elected:—Mr. R. S. Campbell (Messrs. W. and A. Graham and Co.), Mr. S. D. Sassoon (David Sassoon and Co.), and Mr. H. W. Uloth (P. and O. S. N. Co.).

AT Monday's meeting of the Municipal Corporation Mr. Harkisondas Narottamdas, Sir Henry Morland, Dr. Cowasji Hormasji, and Mr. Abdoola M. Dharamsey were declared to have been elected members of the Standing Committee for the ensuing year in place of the four members (Dr. Cowasji Hormasji, Mr. K. M. Shroff, Dr. Blaney, and Mr. K. N. Kabraji) who retired according to the bye-laws regulating the Committee. Messrs. Ardaseer Framjee Moos and Nanabhai Rastamji Ranina were at the same meeting elected auditors of the Municipal accounts for the ensuing year.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, PUNJAB, AND OUDH.

(March 12.)

MR. W. YOUNG, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, will officiate on the High Court Bench of the North-West Provinces when Mr. Justice Tyrrell goes home on six months' leave.

MR. A. LAWRENCE, Commissioner of the Meerut Division, has just conferred with the Lieutenant-Governor at Lucknow about the arrangements for Lord Lansdowne's trip to the Dun. Mr. Lawrence will accompany the Viceroy officially on the occasion.

CULTIVATORS in the Delhi district have now abandoned all hopes of receiving rain in time to save the standing crops, and the failure of the baram harvest may be said to be assured. The fruit crop will share the same fate should there be no rain during the current month.

THE long-delayed winter rains have visited the N.W. Provinces at last, and since Sunday last showers have been general over the North-West, from Meerut and Rohilkhand down to Benares and Jubbulpore. The fall will bring some good to the country; but little, of course, in comparison to what it would have done had it come a month ago.

THE Lahore paper understands that on April 1 next a clean sweep is to be made of all opium-smoking and similar dens in Lahore and other large towns of the province. After the date mentioned no licenses for such houses will be issued, and thus at a cost of between Rs. 60,000 and Rs. 70,000 a pernicious and degrading feature in every large Punjab town will cease to exist.

As at present arranged, the Englishman understands his Excellency the Viceroy, Lady Lansdowne and suite will leave Calcutta early in April for Dehra Dun, where the Viceregal party will remain about ten days, and then proceed to Simla. Lady Beatrice Fitzmaurice (H.E. the Viceroy's youngest daughter) and Lady Maude Anson, accompanied by Mlle. Berthon, leave Calcutta this evening for Dehra Dun, where they will await their Excellencies' arrival, and then proceed to Simla.

CHINESE AT HONOLULU.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a little space in order to bring to the notice of your readers a work which is being carried on, in face of great difficulties, in a distant corner of the world.

There are in the Hawaiian (or Sandwich) Islands about 25,000 Chinese—almost all of the poorer classes—employed as labourers, domestic servants, washermen, market-gardeners, mechanics, and very small tradesmen. Of these 7,000 or more are gathered in Honolulu, the capital of the kingdom; and there, three years ago, the Rev. H. H. Gowen began a mission among them, under the Bishop of Honolulu. The results of his work, so far, are very hopeful, and a permanent church for the Chinese congregation is about to be built.

A day-school for the children, where, under Christian influence, they may be taught both in English and in Chinese, has long been an urgent need; but one difficulty was to find a suitable teacher. At the beginning of this year, however, an American lady, of long experience in this very work, offered her services to Mr. Gowen; and he, in accepting them (with the Bishop's sanction), in order not to lose an opportunity which might not recur, has made himself responsible for her salary. The estimated amount required to cover this and other expenses (including the salary of a Chinese teacher) for the first year is £100.

I appeal earnestly to your readers to give some help to this work, which, though actually confined in space to one small island of the Pacific, is of far-reaching importance; for this reason, that Chinamen as a rule stay only a few years at Honolulu, and if, during that time, they can be won for Christ they may return home as missionaries to their own countrymen, who are so peculiarly hard to reach by direct means.

Subscriptions and donations, marked for "Honolulu Chinese School," will be gratefully received by the treasurer of the Hawaiian Mission, William R. L. Lowe, Esq., 2, Temple-gardens, Temple, E.C., or by the Rev. W. E. Martin, West Farleigh Vicarage, Maidstone (local secretary), through the latter of whom further particulars of the work will be gladly furnished by

BENGAL TO BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 5th inst., p. 314, will be found a discussion as to the possibility of making a good road from Chittagong to the River Irrawadi.

The object is to connect Bengal with Burma, and during five years of peace, while the wealth of the Empire has been increasing rapidly, we appear to have done nothing to connect the two countries. The India Office is a very slow coach, and war may break out at any moment.

An idea appears to have gained possession of the minds of our rulers that Chittagong must be the Western terminus of the contemplated Grand Trunk Road, but the military operations during the last few months prove that the expense of making a good road over or through three or four mountain ranges will be enormous. East of Chittagong the hills run north and south.

Now, instead of hugging north latitude 22° 40', if we go 180 miles south to the latitude of the great trading port of Akyab, we shall find two passes to the Irrawadi River, which have been used by merchants from time immemorial.

1.—The Aeng Pass.

2.—The Talak Pass.

The Aeng Pass, about latitude 20°, and longitude 94° 15', can be made, at a very moderate cost, most valuable for commercial and military purposes. The rush of emigrants from Bengal into Burma will take this route; but it appears to be nobody's business to put it into good order. A Hardinge or Dalhousie would soon insist on the local authorities bestirring themselves.

As a commercial nation we, of course, say that trade may go round via Rangoon. As a military nation we say that cannon and cavalry and elephants can be conveyed by sea. A discussion at the India Office or in Parliament would soon reveal the fact that we have lamentably failed in our duty by neglecting the high road by the Aeng Pass.—Your obedient servant

March 28th.

P.S.—Have we any engineer officer who will undertake the construction of twenty-six miles of road? Eighteen miles from Sarowah in Arakan plain to the top of the Aeng Pass, and eight miles from the top of the Aeng Pass to Kheng Khyong in Burma. Total distance twenty-six miles

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 25.

—O:—

THE LATE MAHARAJAH SCINDIA.

In answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH,

Sir J. FERGUSSON said: The late Maharajah Scindia in May, 1886, informed the Government of India that he had appointed two Native tutors for his son. The Viceroy, in reply, telegraphed on June 19 that "The Government of India will always be most anxious to act as far as possible in accordance with the wishes you have expressed." In 1889 the Government of India, having regard to the Maharajah's age, resolved that the time had come to place his Highness under an English tutor, and Mr. Johnstone was appointed. Mr. Johnstone's salary is 1,500 rupees a month. The Secretary of State has no other information as to the Maharajah's educational charges. The Government of India, as promised by Lord Dufferin, has "always been most anxious to act as far as possible in accordance with the wishes" of the late Maharajah. The present arrangement has been approved by the Council of Regency.

MARCH 27.

EVICTIONS IN CEYLON.

Mr. SEALE-HAYNE asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, having regard to his reply in the House of Commons on the 31st of July last relative to the evictions and consequent deaths from starvation in Ceylon, the Governor had completed his "searching inquiry" which he was making into the circumstances and results of such evictions; whether the complete return of the number of evictions and deaths from starvation in each year from 1869 to 1889 would be added to the returns of vital statistics published in the Ceylon Gazette as heretofore; whether the lists of Newara Eliya district land sales for paddy tax, referred to in Mr. Moir's report, dated September 25, 1889, had been received by the Colonial Office; and whether those lists showed that land sales affecting 10,283 men, women, and children had taken place, and that, as stated by Mr. Le Mesurier, Assistant Government Agent, 981 had died of consequent want, destitution, and disease, and 2,539 persons left destitute in the villages.

Baron H. DE WORMS: The results of the searching inquiry were contained in the full and exhaustive report by Mr. Moir which was received at the Colonial Office on the 11th of November, and which the hon. member has no doubt seen. A copy of the question put by the hon. Baronet the member for Hythe on the 31st of July and of my reply was sent to the Governor, and he was desired to furnish the return asked for, if it could be made out with any approximation to accuracy. The return has not yet been received, and our latest vital statistics are those published in the colonial Gazettes for 1888 and the first quarter of 1889. The Registrar-General has, however, supplied information for the two divisions of the Newara Eliya district in which the great mortality from starvation is said to have occurred in the years 1882 to 1885, and his statistics show that, as nearly as can be ascertained, the death-rate per 1,000 between 1881 and 1888 was slightly less than between 1871 and 1880, and that the population was larger in 1881 than in 1871, and in 1888 than in 1881. Mr. Moir states at the end of his report that the lists referred to, being very voluminous, are not sent, but an abstract of them is given, from which the figures mentioned in the question are correctly quoted. Mr. Le Mesurier's letters on the subject are also included. The Secretary of State has given the whole matter the most careful consideration, and has seen no reason to doubt the soundness of Mr. Moir's conclusions, which are supported by the Registrar-General's returns and other statistics. He considers that while in some cases hardship was caused by too inflexible collection of arrears, there has been very grave exaggeration; and this, as I stated on the 31st of July, was from the first believed to be the case.

SERGEANT-MAJOR W. L. HARWOOD, of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, wins the Viceroy's and the Lieutenant-Governor's prizes, with an aggregate score of 289. There were three stages fired, as for the Queen's prize at Wimbledon.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

TRAVELS IN INDIA.*

The interest aroused of late years in the factory period of the history of the British Indian Empire was certain at last to lead to a general demand for revised and critical editions of the works of those English and French travellers of the seventeenth century who did so much to spread in Europe a knowledge of the great wealth of the modern trade with the East, founded by the Portuguese, and first organised on thoroughly commercial principles by the Dutch. Chief among these seventeenth century travellers were the Englishmen, Edward Terry, appointed "Chaplain to the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Row, Lord Ambassador to the Great Mogul," in 1614-15; Thomas Herbert, who went out with the East India Company's fleet to Surat in 1626; John Fryer, who sailed as surgeon on the London, with the fleet of 1672; and John Ovington, another of the Company's chaplains, who sailed to Surat in 1689—and the far better known Frenchmen, Jean Baptiste Tavernier, who travelled in Turkey, Persia, India, and the Indian archipelago almost continuously from 1631 to 1666; François Bernier, who travelled in India and other Oriental countries between 1654 and 1670; Jean de Thevenot, who sojourned in the East between 1655 and 1664; and "Sir John" Chardin, who visited Persia and India between 1664 and 1670, and again between 1671 and 1681, in which last year he was knighted by Charles II., and settled in London, where he remained until his death in 1713. Of these men Tavernier alone had received what is nowadays called a technical training as a jeweller and dealer in gems, and in consequence he was ever on the alert to gather information not only regarding the Indian traffic in precious stones, but about all the sumptuary industries of the East, then still in their perfection, although doomed to be soon extinguished by the competition of the modern mechanical manufacturers in the West. Hence the superior value attached by students of the history of Indian commerce and art to the records of his picturesque peregrinations left us by Tavernier, as compared with those of any other contemporary European traveller. Fryer, who was a Doctor of Medicine of Cambridge, and took a keen and learned interest in the innumerable drugs, condiments and spices, dyes and tans, and oils and oil seeds, that have ever formed so large a part of the exports from India, is after Tavernier the most acceptable authority on the trade of the English East India Company during the factory period; and this is chiefly due to his having closely followed his illustrious predecessor's methods of observation.

But Tavernier's "Nouvelle Relation de l'Intérieur du Serrail du Grand Seigneur," first published in 1675, and his "Six Voyages, faits en Turquie, en Perse, et aux Indes," published in 1676, proved also of the highest importance in quite another way. Unlike Bernier (who was also a Doctor of Medicine), Chardin, Thevenot, and the rest, Tavernier was not a man of any literary or scientific culture; but owing to his thorough knowledge of the business in which he had been brought up, and his eagerness in the prosecution of it, down to the very day of his death at Moscow in 1689, he succeeded in giving such reality to his descriptive notes of the various commodities of the affluent merchandise of the East, that he at once powerfully excited the imagination of the peoples of the West, and stimulated the statesmen not only of France, but of Prussia and Russia also, to seek a participation in that commerce with India which, from the earliest ages, had endowed every country successively engaged in it with renewed national life and the highest worldly prosperity. Indeed, among the various influences that at length led the French to contest the empire of India with us in the 18th century, and down to the final overthrow of Bonaparte in 1815, the effect of the writings of Tavernier on the minds of his gifted countrymen cannot be overlooked. As an example of his power, through his professional grasp of detail, in impressing his readers, we would refer to the chapters in the "Nouvelle Relation" giving an account of the "Treasures" and the "Secret Treasures" of the Sultans of Turkey, about which so much has recently been written in ignorance.

It was with genuine satisfaction, therefore, that the announcement was some time ago received of the intention of Messrs. Macmillan to publish a fresh edition of Tavernier's "Travels in India," translated direct from the French text by Dr. Valentine Ball, formerly of the Geological Survey of India, and the author of "Jungle Life in India," and "The Economic Geology of India,"—two admirable works, affording ample proof of Dr. Ball's competence to edit a merchant traveller whose speciality is his intimate knowledge of the traffic of the seventeenth century in precious stones. And as regards the particulars in which it was anticipated that Dr. Ball would excel, we may at once say that he has fulfilled our expectations, and that nothing could be better than his treatment of chapters xii. to xvi. inclusive, dealing with diamonds and the diamond mines of Golconda, pearls, rubies, and other coloured gems, and with the general articles of Indian sumptuary merchandise, and the frauds practised in their manufacture. Also his six appendices, on the Koh-i-nor diamond and the Indian diamond mines, the ruby mines of Burma, and the sapphire mines of Ceylon, are invaluable contributions to our knowledge of these attractive subjects. But after all this has been admitted, it must be added, however reluctantly, that Dr. Ball's translation is marred by one great literary defect, which detracts from the full satisfaction it would otherwise have given, and this even in the chapters we have indicated as models of scientific editing. Instead of reproducing the mannerisms, or at least the spellings of the names of places and persons, of his author, as he was bound to do in the case of an old-established favourite like Tavernier, he has rendered all the proper nouns of the original according to the new system of the transliteration of Oriental names adopted by the Government of India; and this official canker, eating as it does into every page of Dr. Ball's volumes, has effectually effaced from them every trace of the typographical physiognomy of the seventeenth century, which a more sympathetic translator would have insisted on most scrupulously preserving. An editor who has committed this enormity cannot be expected to adopt an English style of writing equivalent to that of the original French; and, in fact, Dr. Ball has simply rendered the French of Tavernier into his own plain, straightforward English; with the consequence that his translation altogether fails in beguiling us back two centuries in the course of time, and reads from its first page to the last as if it were a recent publication of the Revenue and Agricultural Department of the Government of India. Thus, instead of translating the heading of the first chapter "The Road from Ispahan to Agra through Gomron," where is particularly shown the manner of Sailing from Ormuz to Surat," Dr. Ball translates it, "Route from Ispahan to Agra by (way of) Gombroon," where particular mention is made of the Navigation from Hormuz to Surat." To write Hormuz for Ormuz, and again, as at p. 5, Bassora for Balsara, is utterly unpardonable. Of course there is no arbitrary rule in such matters. But neither is there such a thing as the right spelling of any word, what is called right spelling being no more than the wrong spelling of the majority, and wrong spelling the right spelling of the minority. Nothing detracts so much from the picturesqueness of a printed page as the mechanical uniformity of spelling that marks the nineteenth century; and certainly such forms as Ormuz and Balsara, since they have become consecrated by long use in poetry and romance, until they seem as if irradiated with a glamour of their own, should never be departed from except in official gazetteers and trade circulars.

During the thirty-seven years covered by Tavernier's travels he made six journeys into the East; and of these all except the first extended to India, where he altogether spent thirteen years. He always went to and from India by way of Bunder Abbas, except in his last journey, when he returned home by the Cape of Good Hope. He was keenly interested in everything he saw in India, and in reading his minute descriptions of the life and labour of the country one cannot but observe how little they have changed, in spite of all the political and commercial revolutions it has undergone in the past three hundred years, and notwithstanding the slowly destructive opposition its ancient co-operative civilisation has had to endure, since the withdrawal of the East India Company's commercial monopoly in 1834, from the competitive system of Western civilisation. The economic changes under British rule have been the most marked; and yet all the great centres of Indian manufacture—Burhanpur, Dacca, Broach, Ahmedabad, Surat, &c.—mentioned by Tavernier are still the seats of the identical manufacturers for which they have always been famous; and although greatly depressed after 1834, they have since 1878 experienced something of a revival, which it is to be hoped may prove permanent, of their ancient industrial activity and opulence.

Indeed, one of the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of the progress of the English and Germans in the East is the great difficulty they have in realising how little it has changed. Tavernier sums up his eighth chapter, giving an account of his successful dealings at the Mogul Court, and of the means through which he prospered in them, with these pregnant words:—

"So true is it that those who desire to do business in the Courts of the Princes in Turkey as well as in Persia and India, should not attempt to commence anything unless they have considerable presents ready prepared, and almost always an open purse for divers officers of trust of whose offices they have need."

This passage was some years ago quoted to a great financier who wished to obtain an important concession in Constantinople. But although repeatedly advised that nothing would be effected unless the preliminary interchange of presents, after the immemorial manner of the Turks, was made, he obstinately refused to condescend to such corrupt practices, as he held them to be, and consequently not only failed in his purpose, but died of vexation at his lack of success. Throughout the East the interchange of presents is an essential introduction to any important transaction between men, as without it they are not sure of enjoying each other's confidence; and complaints are never heard against the magistrate who takes a present from both the litigants before him, but returns it to the one against whom he decides. Such a one is the ideal "just judge" in Oriental eyes still. The bribe, as we stigmatise these gifts, is really of the nature of "fees paid into court," and is not so much meant to affect the result as to make it surer. The suitor who loses is certain that all that was possible has been done for him, and submits with greater content, therefore, to the decree of Providence.

It is in the eighth chapter of the second book of his Indian itinerary that Tavernier gives his famous account of "The Peacock Throne of Delhi," now at Teheran, and nothing can be more careful and clear than Dr. Ball's translation of it:—

"The principal throne, which is placed in the hall of the first court, is nearly of the form and size of our camp beds; that is to say, it is about 6 feet long and 4 wide. Upon the four feet, which are very massive, and from 20 to 25 inches high, are fixed the four bars which support the base of the throne, and upon these bars are raised twelve columns, which sustain the canopy on three sides, there not being any on that which faces the court. Both the feet and the bars, which are more than 18 inches long, are covered with gold, inlaid and enriched with numerous diamonds, rubies, and emeralds. In the middle of each bar there is a large balass ruby cut en cabochon with four emeralds round it, which form a square cross. Next in succession, from one side to the other along the length of the bars there are similar crosses, arranged so that in one the ruby is in the middle of four emeralds, and in another the emerald is in the middle and four balass rubies surround it. . . . I counted the large balass rubies on the great throne, and there are about 108, all cabuchons, the least of which weighs 100 carats, but there are some which weigh, apparently, 200 and more. As for the emeralds, there are plenty of good colour, but they have many flaws; the largest may weigh 60 and the least 30 carats. I counted about 116. . . . The underside of the canopy is covered with diamonds and pearls, with a fringe of pearls all round; and above the canopy, which is a quadrangular-shaped dome, there is to be seen a peacock, with elevated tail, made of blue sapphires and other coloured stones, the body being of gold, inlaid with precious stones, having a large ruby in front of the breast, from whence hangs a pear-shaped pearl of 50 carats or thereabouts; and of a somewhat yellow water. On both sides of the peacock is a large bouquet of the same height as the bird, and consisting of many kinds of flowers, made of gold, inlaid with precious stones. On the side of the throne which is opposite the court there is to be seen a jewel, consisting of a diamond of from 80 to 90 carats weight, with rubies and emeralds round it. . . . But that which, in my opinion, is the most costly thing about this magnificent throne is that the twelve columns supporting the canopy are surrounded with beautiful rows of pearls, which are round and of fine water, and weigh from 6 to 8 carats each."

Tavernier says the throne was reputed to have cost about £12,000,000 of our money. Bernier reduces this to £4,500,000, and Mr. S. G. W. Benjamin, in his volume on "Persia" in the "Story of the Nations" series, to about £2,600,000. No doubt it has been subject to ceaseless dilapidation from the time of its completion by Shah Jehan; but even now it remains the grandest object of sumptuary art ever devised by man.

In Batavia Tavernier notices the drinking habits of the Dutch. Their greatest joy was when vessels came from Holland, for they brought all kinds of strong drinks, and the whole town turned to festivity. Their especial craving was for English beer, and "that which they call mom, which comes from Brunswick."

At the date of Tavernier's travels the European commerce with the East was in the hands of the Dutch, and the Mogul Empire in India was at the plenitude of its power; Persia, as reconsolidated by Abbas the Great, was still, all through the reigns of his successors, Shah Sufi and Abbas II., a leading Asiatic monarchy; Turkey, under Amurath IV. and Mahomet IV., had reached its utmost extension; and France, under the "Grand Monarque," was the first State of Christendom. England, on the other hand, had sunk to the lowest depths of national weakness and humiliation. Yet at this very time the few obscure Englishmen who, in the service of "the Governour and Company of Merchants of London trading into the East," had established themselves as "factors" all round the coasts of India, were in this humble office, by their natural force of character, slowly and surely laying the foundation of that commercial supremacy in the East which, under the prescient direction given it by Sir Josia Child, redeemed the future of England at the very moment when Charles II. was ready to betray it for the favours of Louise de Querouaille. The success of the English East India Company was the first step in the prodigious political development of England during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and eventually led to our present mercantile and naval preponderance. It was the possession of India, of the wealth we drew from India, that enabled us to successfully resist and break down the European coalition formed against us at the beginning of the nineteenth century by Bonaparte; and the possession of India still offers the best guarantee we could hold of the continued unity and prosperity of the British Empire. All our colonies, as well as the United States of America, have a common interest in our peaceful retention of India, inasmuch as they are thereby secured an undisturbed free trade with that country; and it is the growing importance of this commercial connection to them that will at last bring about their Imperial Federation with the mother country, which for the present is no more than an aspiration of a few high-souled Englishmen here and in America and our other colonies.

In conclusion, we trust that the favour with which Dr. Ball's translation of Tavernier's "Travels in India" is sure to be received will encourage the publishers to bring out annotated editions of other French and English travellers of the seventeenth century; and in such case they could make no better selection for their next issue than John Fryer's "New Account of East India and Persia."

SOUTH WALES BORDERERS (24th REGIMENT).—The stained glass window from the studio of Mr. Taylor, of Berners-street, given by the regiment, in memory of their comrades who fell in the Burma Campaign, has been erected in the "Priory" Church, Brecon, the territorial district of the regiment. The memorial brass beneath it records the name of every man (fifty-one in all) who fell in action or died of disease during the campaign of 1886-7-8.

At the annual meeting of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, on April 16th, the directors will recommend that, after writing off £5,000 from premises account, a dividend be declared for the past half-year at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum free of income tax (making with the interim dividend 8 per cent. for the year), that £50,000 be added to the reserve fund, bringing it up to £800,000, and £5,000 to officers' superannuation fund, leaving £9,767 17s. 11d. to be carried forward.

A BENGALI "ENGLISHMAN."—The proprietors of the Calcutta Englishman intend shortly to bring out a Bengali daily paper, which will be a Bengali translation of the daily edition of that journal. It will be called Su-prabhat, which, translated into Bengali, means "Good Morning." A staff of educated Bengalis, well up in their mother tongue, have been engaged by the proprietors to conduct the journal.

THE Cochin paper says:—"In Bali, an island in the Indian Archipelago east of Java, the burning of widows still goes on notwithstanding treaties with the Netherlands India Government. They are burned along with the corpses of their husbands. The latter's slaves also share the fate of the deceased in case of his holding high rank. The Government has not forbidden stabbing widows to death. A short time ago three wives of a chief at Bangli were thus offered up."

A BANGALORE paper hints that an attempt is again being made to make Bangalore the headquarters of the Madras Army. "A gentleman connected with the Military Secretariat was in Bangalore last week, inspecting the Mysore Public Offices, with a view of ascertaining what accommodation they offer. There can be no doubt that the spread of Bangalore would be even quicker than what it is at present, if we could only ensure a good water supply."

The Civil and Military Gazette remarks:—"That Russophobia has for a long time silently governed the native mind, especially in Bengal, is well known to those who have talked on the subject to a number of intelligent natives. We are assured that the fear of a Russian invasion has deterred not a few wealthy natives from investing their savings in Government Securities. Some of them think it prudent to divide the investment of their surplus wealth between the bank and their own secret coffers under the ground. These facts go to further recommend the speedy completion of the frontier defences, which will tend to allay and restore confidence."

THE ARMY IN INDIA—THE NATIVE.

UNSATISFACTORY as it is to learn that there is a difficulty in keeping up the European army in India to a proper complement of seasoned soldiers it is still more unsatisfactory to hear that a difficulty also exists, and is likely to increase, in finding recruits amongst the old fighting classes of the country to fill the ranks of the Native Army. We are told that with the spread of civilisation the martial spirit among the classes from which the Native Army in India has hitherto been recruited is declining, and that the supply of good fighting material in India itself has now become unequal to the demand. Taking the Punjab, for instance, as the province in which the fighting classes are most numerous, it will be found, says the Pioneer, that military service has distinctly declined in popularity of late years, and that from causes other than merely mercenary ones. "The long reign of internal peace has directly affected the character of the population; the traditions of military supremacy among the Sikhs are dying out; the Punjabi Mahomedans are more content on the cultivation of their lands, secure in the possession of such property as they can accumulate, while the once restless Pathan tribes within the border are not slow to follow the example thus set them. There are still among the younger men adventurous spirits who see attractions in a soldier's life, apart from any question of pay and pension, but the recruiting parties find their task of enlistment growing more difficult. The struggle for existence among the members of a family in the village communities has become less severe as the country has advanced in prosperity under British rule, and the old custom of one or two of the sons passing into the army, as a matter of course, is no longer observed. Officers of long experience in the Punjab have noticed the change with regret, for they cannot now pick and choose their men, as was the case a generation ago." "Peace hath her victims," we know, "no less renowned than war," but victories such as these are rather to be catalogued as disasters, so far as the efficiency of the Native armies of India are concerned. The Government of India, in its anxiety for the rapid settlement of the districts of Upper Burma, has been doing injury to the military service by indenting in the Punjab regiments for volunteers for police duty in Burma. On this point an officer, who signs himself "Despairing Adjutant," writes to the Civil and Military Gazette as follows:—

"Three years or so ago my regiment lost I should be afraid to say how many men, especially Sikhs, when volunteers were called for for Burma police battalions and for the new Sikh regiments. They left us, attracted in the former case by the allurements of high pay; in the latter for the sake of rapid promotion. With immense trouble we refilled our ranks with a fine batch of recruits. I have watched these boys with loving interest, thinking that after all I was not so badly off. The volunteers went off to Burma and elsewhere, and there remained a lot of oldish non-commissioned officers and the recruits who took the places of the volunteers. It is time now for the old non-commissioned officers to go, and I want men to fill their vacancies. But alas! with but few exceptions my youngsters are all bent on taking their discharge as soon as their three years are up, and going off to Burma.

"I can hardly get Sikh recruits enough to keep the regiment up to ordinary strength. I am in despair as to what to do when my three-years lads all go. How long is this iniquitous drain upon us to go on? In these days of 'fire discipline' and 'advanced education of the Sepoy' it takes all those three years to train a man to be even a decent non-commissioned officer—and yet Government lets these men go just at the very moment they are most wanted. Our 'magnificent Sikh Regiments' will soon consist of none but what the Chief calls 'encumbrances,' and weedy boys who haven't the spirit to go so far from home as Burma. I know we can stop the men leaving us as long as the regiment is under strength, but it is a sorrow to me to think that they are bent on the fleshpots and high pay of Burma, and have the right to go as soon as there are duty men enough to do the work. We want that 'three years' rule' put an end to, Burma recruiting stopped, and the Sepoy's pay increased or some compensation made to improve his position."

The complaint made by this officer is a very serious one, and it is to be hoped that it will not be passed over unheeded by the authorities. It certainly seems an extraordinary and extravagant waste of valuable "war material" to draft Sikh soldiers to Burma to turn them there into policemen. If, however, in addition to this drain upon the military resources of the Punjab it be also true that the old martial spirit, which was once so rampant there, is dying out, a grave difficulty has to be faced. It is accepted now throughout India that the hour is approaching when the question of supremacy there will have to be for ever decided by shock of battle between England and Russia. We ourselves have not been so thoroughly imbued with Russophobia as some of our contemporaries here and in India, and have consequently not joined in swelling the notes of alarm which the others have so loudly and so often sounded. Allowing that Slavonic ambition may lead the soldiers of the Czar to try conclusions with the soldiers of the Queen-Empress some day in the near or distant future, we have never felt any misgivings as to what the result will be. We calculated that, defended by her splendid armies, European and Native India would be able to hurl back in discomfiture and defeat from her frontiers the boldest and most skilful of invaders. But then we calculated that shoulder to shoulder with the English rank and file would be the warrior Sikh, Pathan, Goorkha, and Mahratta, and we did not take into consideration the possibility of these latter turning their swords into plough-shares and preferring the soft time of peace to the hurly-burly time of war. We did not calculate that in the day of India's extremity she would have to fall back upon a fighting line composed of Bengali Babús and Parsi Volunteers. Happily we do not yet contemplate this military change of front. In spite of despairing adjutants and warning editors, we cling to the hope that things are "not as bad as they seem" in the Punjab, and that we have not yet exhausted the Native fighting material there. If English culture and civilisation have made Sikh and Pathan milder-mannered men it does not immediately follow that the "art of cutting throats"—an art in which they have shown such proficiency in the past—is a lost art now with them. At least, let us hope not.

THE directors of the South-East Mysore Company have announced to the shareholders that they have secured the assistance of Messrs. John Taylor and Sons as managers and consulting engineers of the company, and that Mr. John Garland has been appointed secretary. The offices have been removed to Nos. 6 and 7, Queen-street-place, E.C.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A NATIVE non-commissioned officer of the 6th B.C. was recently cut up by a Pathan near Apozai. He had foolishly ventured without arms to some little distance from the camp, and a comrade who was a hundred yards off or so, also unarmed, could only attempt to save him by throwing stones.

THE restriction of the 3rd Squadron of the 3rd Madras Cavalry, imposed on account of a breach of field manoeuvres regulations, has been removed. It will be remembered that the squadron were deprived of their swords because of one party coming into actual collision with a defending force of the 21st Hussars.

As a sequence of the Bulkley Court-Martial, an officer of the Bombay Cavalry has prepared a book of instructions for the keeping of native cavalry accounts, which has been approved by the Government, for issue at the public expense to General Officers commanding districts in which Native cavalry are serving, and to cavalry corps, but individual officers are to purchase it at their own expense.

It was originally proposed under the Indian mobilisation scheme to put down large stores of clothing and equipment at Rawal Pindi and Quetta, whence they could be issued in case of the troops having to take the field on the North-West Frontier. Careful calculation, however, showed that it would be almost impossible to issue these necessities quickly enough on an emergency, and the plan has been adopted of storing them at each station where the units of the Army Corps are located. They will thus be available for issue at the shortest notice to regiments and batteries when the order for mobilisation is given.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says:—"Officers of the Medical Staff will doubtless be glad to hear that the Government of India has now under consideration the question of allowing surgeons of the British service to attend a course of practical surgery at Indian Hospitals, in order that they may obtain the necessary qualification certificate for promotion. Hitherto they have had to obtain this certificate in England, simply, we presume, because no facilities existed in this country for attending a course of practical surgery. It seems, however, but right that they should be allowed to pass the course in India, as otherwise it is a discouragement to the prolongation of their service in this country."

FAREWELL ORDER BY H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.

The following is the text of his Royal Highness's Farewell Order to the Bombay Army, which was issued yesterday morning:—

"In giving over the Command of the Bombay Army, I desire to thank the General Officers, the Staff, and all ranks under my Command for the hearty support they have given me at all times.

"I congratulate the Bombay Army on the good services performed by the regiments and batteries that were employed in the operations in Burma, in the Lushai country, and on the Somali Coast.

"I trust that the Army will always maintain a high state of efficiency and discipline, and in wishing them good-bye I desire to assure them of the great interest I shall always continue to take in their welfare."

(Sd.) ARTHUR, Lieut.-General,

Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army.

PERSIA.—AN IMPORTANT DIPLOMATIC CHANGE.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Persia had scarcely returned from his journey to Europe, and re-entered his capital, Teheran, before he made a most wise and remarkable change in his Diplomatic body by sending here to London his Excellency General Mirza Mehemed Ali Khan, Alla-us-Saltaneh, as his Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

Throughout his last journey to Europe H.I.M. the Shah left everywhere the most favourable opinion, not only as to the natural courtesy and benevolence of his disposition, but also as to his high and extraordinary talents as a reigning Sovereign—in fact, of high perception and diplomacy. Many European Diplomats were astonished to find that the Shah of Persia was quite as much au courant of the important questions of Europe as they were themselves. H.I.M. the Shah, having at heart the prosperity, welfare, and real happiness—in fact, both of his Empire and of all his people in general—without any unfair preference, carefully informed himself during his sojourn in each different country on every question, and on every matter which could really improve the condition, both of his Empire and of his people.

Having sojourned some little time in the principal countries of Europe, and having seen with his own eyes and heard with his own ears how things are managed in Europe, the Shah henceforth will not have to count (blindly) upon the reports, or information, usually more or less interested, of the several European Diplomats of Teheran. He will use his own exceptionally high judgment and extraordinary natural intelligence; for he must perceive that often—too often, alas!—fanatical jealousies exist amongst European statesmen even, who, in order to gain the victory for their own particular political point, often sacrifice the true, natural interests and rights of the country to which they are accredited!

The newly-appointed Minister of Persia in London has already had serious and valuable diplomatic experience. He was for seven or eight years Persian Consul-General in India, and then, in the same capacity, for some time at Baghdad, whence he became Governor of Resht; and he comes to London after having been for the last eight years Persian Consul-General at Tiflis (Caucasus), the Shah having on this promotion raised him to the highest rank in the Empire, namely, "Alla-us-Saltaneh."

A better choice could scarcely have been made, for H.E. General Mirza Mehemed Ali Khan is yet young in years, but old enough in diplomacy to ably fulfil the high functions here in London which his august Sovereign has confided to him. He possesses the secret of all real diplomatists. He is exceedingly affable, courteous, and patient with his visitors; in fact, he knows the "art of listening" as well as that of talking, but speaks only to the point—few but expressive phrases. He has already made an excellent personal impression in this country, and is generally pronounced to be un charmant homme, which means that he will certainly become a favourite foreign representative, as Musurus Pasha was for so many years. But the exceptional sagacity of this important diplomatic change lies in the fact that H.E. General Mirza Mehemed Ali Khan is a real Persian, and a real Persian Mahomedan!—of high, even noble family, of profound education and intellect, of perfect "civilisation," and of great personal merit. Therefore, now England can closely study and judge what a real Persian, a real Persian Mahomedan, is like; and being thus of the same pure race and religion (Persian), he will be the better able and fit to serve his Sovereign in England, and also become the more sympathetic here, for England now will be more sure of having the special attention of the Shah through the channel of his representative of same race and creed than through the intermediary of those who are not of his country and creed.

The MILITARY CAREER. A Guide to Young
Officers, Army Candidates, and Parents. By Lieut.-
General Sir W. BELLAIRS, K.C.M.G., C.B."A practical handbook, which may help parents to answer the urgent question, what to do with their boys."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE."There is a good deal of useful information combined with much sound advice in Sir W. Bellairs' book. . . .
Parents will find in it how commissions are to be obtained, the examinations necessary to be passed and their scope, the cost of outfit, and the amount of private allowance that is advisable. . . . and detailed statements of all the articles which are necessary for a complete but not extravagant outfit. . . . The author's estimates are perfectly reasonable, and can be safely followed."—BROAD ARROW."Sir William Bellairs has omitted nothing likely to

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When, out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

Mrs. FLORENCE STONE, Montague Villa, Queen's Road, High Wycombe, says:—

"I have received great benefit from taking Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. For many months I have had an attack come on four nights out of seven, and lately in the day time as well; but since taking your medicine I have only had one slight attack in a month."

Mrs. MARY PRICE, Gronant, near Holywell, says:—

"I had suffered for four years with Asthma. I have been now nine months without any attack. I have been cured by Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. I can never praise it enough."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 1896.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 21st March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 19th March; and from Calcutta to the 19th March.

THE treaty settling the Sikkim-Tibet question was signed by the Viceroy and the Amban at Government House on March 17th. It covers little more than one printed sheet, and its main point is the confirmation of the British claim to consider Sikkim as a feudatory State of India. At the State dinner on Friday Lord Lansdowne proposed the health of the Emperor of China, the ally of England, to which the Amban responded in Chinese.

It is officially announced that the Viceroy and suite will leave Calcutta for Saharunpore and Dehra Dun en route to Simla on the evening of March 30th. The probable date of his Excellency's arrival at Simla will be April 20th.

THE Commander-in-Chief will be accompanied on his Assam tour by the Adjutant-General, Surgeon-Major Owen, and Lieut. Oxley, A.D.C. His Excellency will again be on tour after his return from Assam, taking this time the northern parts of the North-West Provinces. Sir Frederick Roberts, on the invitation of the Lord Mayor, has joined the Mansion House Committee formed for raising a memorial to Lord Napier.

MAJOR-GENERAL LORD FRANKFORT has arrived at Allahabad from Bombay, and taken over command of the District from Sir John Hudson, who has left for Meerut.

MAJOR-GENERAL GORDON, commanding in Burma, vacates his command shortly on promotion to lieutenant-general. He will be succeeded by Brigadier-General Stewart, commanding the Hyderabad contingent.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL PROTHEROE, Quartermaster-General in Madras, officiates as Commandant of the Hyderabad Contingent during Brigadier-General Stewart's absence on leave, and will succeed him permanently when he assumes the Burma command.

COLONEL A. A. KINLOCH, of the King's Royal Rifles, will officiate for Brigadier-General Galbraith in the command of the Umballa District.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WOLSELEY resumes command at Mandalay, Colonel Gatacre returning to the post of Deputy Quartermaster-General.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA will shortly arrive in Chota Nagpur to consecrate the Bishop-elect of the new diocese, the Rev. Mr. Whitelay. The ceremony will probably be attended by the Bishops of Bombay, Madras, and Rangoon.

BISHOP GELL, of Madras, goes to England on six months' leave, Archdeacon Browne acting as Diocesan.

MR. PROPERT is permitted to resign the Civil Service from April 4th. His resignation is stated to be owing to his having been superseded by the nomination of Mr. Moore to the Bombay Legislative Council.

LORD WILLIAM BERESFORD, whose health has been in an unsatisfactory state for some time past, proceeds home under the advice of the doctors for six months, leaving Bombay in the middle of April. Captain Streatfeild will act for him as Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

MR. NICHOLLS, the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, takes six months' leave. He is to be succeeded temporarily by Mr. Tweedie, pending the arrival of Mr. Dease, the permanent successor, from Fyzabad.

MR. C. H. HILL, Public Prosecutor in the North-West Provinces, has left Allahabad to take up one of the officiating vacancies in the Calcutta High Court. Mr. H. W. Gordon and Mr. Rampini are gazetted to the other two Judgeships. Mr. G. E. A. Ross, barrister-at-law, officiates for Mr. Hill.

MR. EVANS PUGH officiates as Standing Counsel in the Presidency of Fort William during Mr. Phillips' absence on furlough.

CAPTAIN W. J. BIRD acts as second Deputy Secretary in the Military Department during Major Broadbent's absence on furlough. Lieutenant-Colonel Maitland, of the Poona Horse, will probably act as Assistant Secretary during Major Barrow's absence in the Shan States.

INFLUENZA is prevalent in almost every station in India; and in Bombay it has had some effect on the death-rate.

THE news from the Chin-Lushai country continues to be of a satisfactory nature.

THE Bombay Amateurs have given four very successful representations of The Yeomen of the Guard.

H.H. THE NIZAM has made a grant of £5,000 to the Educational Institute Mr. H. S. King proposes to establish near London.

LIEUTENANT FENTON, 1st Bengal Cavalry, was killed while playing polo on the 12th March at Saugor.

MR. SANDEMAN, of the 17th Lancers, has had a severe fall whilst tent-pegging, and sustained concussion of the brain.

THE Bombay Salt and Salt Revenue Bill was read a third time and passed at a meeting of the Legislative Council on March 19.

BRIGADIER GENERAL SYMONS, at present in charge at the Chin Field Force, will proceed to England in June.

O'HARA and Bellew, the soldiers implicated in the Dum-Dum murder, have been discharged from the army.

COLONEL LUARD, who vacates his post as Consulting Engineer to Government in July, will be succeeded by Mr. Horace Bell.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS, now on tour through Bareilly, Naini Tal, Almora, and Raniket, is timed to reach Simla on the 29th of April.

THE death-rate in Bombay last week was 38.45 per thousand as compared with 23.47 during the corresponding week last year. The increase is due to fevers and bronchial affections.

THE opening of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway will give a new telegraph route between Bombay and Calcutta. Copper wire is to be laid the whole distance, and messages will be signalled direct, as is now the case between Bombay and Madras. The wire has already reached Nagpur, and will soon be extended to Calcutta. It will greatly relieve the traffic on the existing lines, and messages passing between Calcutta and Europe via Suez will be more expeditiously disposed of.

WE learn that previous to handing over the command of the Bombay Army, his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught was pleased to allow his name to be associated with the Morley Hall Institute, in which he took a great interest. He, therefore, wished it to be called, for the future, the "Soldiers' Connaught Club."

NOTES.

THE news from India this week is of a quiet, uneventful nature. At the Capitol public opinion was being exercised in discussing the Budget, the main features of which appear to have met with general approval, but in certain directions Sir David Barbour has not succeeded in carrying the Native or European community with him. The former would have him employ his estimated surplus in the reduction of the salt duties and the latter in the reduction of the income-tax. The proposed restitution of the Famine fund does not seem to meet with the approval of either community, but more unbiassed and independent opinion outside of Calcutta must approve of the financial member's proposal as a sound and wise precautionary measure.

It is, of course, only in accordance with the instincts of human nature, white or black, to dislike taxes that appeal direct to the pocket, and so the income-tax, which, in theory, is the fairest of all forms of taxation, is, perhaps, the most unpopular in India. It has always been more so with the Europeans than with the Natives, for the Government assessor can get to know the means of the former very readily, whereas the Natives have clever ways of deceiving the most searching of collectors. In the bazaars the Native merchants in many instances discovered a simple plan long ago of lessening the incidence upon themselves of income-tax or license tax. It was to keep two sets of books—one for their own information, and the other for the information of the tax-gatherer.

SEEING that Sir David Barbour has striven so hard to show that the finances of India are not in the hopeless state of ever-recurring deficit which the pessimists are so fond of alleging, it is hard upon his capacity and upon his conscience to be taunted with the charge that he has deliberately under-estimated the Revenue in order to avoid any remission whatever of taxation. Yet this is the charge which, we learn from the telegram of the Times correspondent at Calcutta, is being brought against him in that city, in which fault-finding with officials has been brought to great perfection as an abusive art. But the same charge has been made before. Any Financial Member who has hinted at the possibility of a surplus, without hinting also some intention of reduction of taxation, has always been accused of deliberately under-estimating revenue. But the result has too often shown over-estimates instead of under. Then Calcutta abuses the Member of Finance for carelessness and want of foresight. It is a way Calcutta has.

It is only natural that the Hon. Mr. Evans, who is a lawyer, and that the Times Calcutta correspondent, who is of the same honourable profession also, should be of opinion that Government should sanction a more liberal expenditure upon the administration of justice by increasing the number of subordinate Courts, their ministerial officers and their salaries. It is stated by the Legal Member of Council and by the correspondent that in these respects the Bengal Establishment is "starved." If this be so a change must have come over that Presidency. Some years ago the establishment referred to was fattening rather than starving, but it may be that the love of litigation amongst the Natives is on the increase, and so more Courts and law officers are required. The encouragement of litigation has been one of the most marked features of British rule. We wanted to give the people justice—we have given them law. This is not quite the same thing, but all lawyers approve of what has been done, and would have Government do more in the same direction.

It might be thought, too, by some who have experience of India, that we had done fairly well in obliging the Natives with an Educational Establishment—but more is to be done in this matter also. Encouragement and money are to be given to a Society lately formed for the Diffusion of Useful Literature in India, having for its objects the cheap reproduction in India of standard English and vernacular works, and to stimulate the habit of reading by establishing libraries. Admirable objects, certainly; but it is to be hoped that in carrying them out they will be so directed as to benefit other races in India besides the Bengali Babus, who have shown strange gratitude for the advantages of education and useful literature already bestowed upon them under British rule.

THERE has been a move lately in financial circles to promote one or more joint-stock companies for the purpose of prospecting and developing the mineral wealth of Ceylon, which island is believed to possess extraordinary wealth in undiscovered gems and minerals. The island possesses, however, wealth of another character, which after having been too long neglected is now about to be sought for. The council of the Ceylon Asiatic Society, in its last report, urges on the Government the importance of systematically collecting, transcribing, and publishing the manuscripts of the ancient literature of the island which are scattered about in the libraries of temples, as well as in private houses. The researches which have already been made by individuals, or on behalf of the Government, show that manuscripts of great value may be found. During the last three years private exertions have secured sixty-nine of these; but what is needed is that the work should be undertaken as carefully and systematically as in India, where the duty of preserving the ancient literature of the country has been recognised by the Government, and where the collection of ancient manuscripts has for years past been conducted by a large staff of officers.

It is stated that Sir Frederick Roberts, at the earnest solicitation of Lord Lansdowne, has been granted an extension of his command in India for twelve months from the expiry of his five years' tenure of office in November next. This arrangement has been urged upon the Secretary of State, it is said, owing to the importance of keeping the present Commander-in-Chief in India at his post until certain matters connected with the frontier defences, and with changes in the administration of the Native armies, inaugurated in his time, are completed or satisfactorily settled. So far well; but for many reasons it is to be regretted that the five years' tenure rule is played so fast and loose with in other cases. We think that so important a command as that of the Chief of the Armies of India should be for a longer period than five years; but what of other offices? Lord William Beresford is only now vacating his pleasant and profitable office in India after having been on the staff of four successive Viceroys, with intervals of leave to go into action and win promotion and decorations elsewhere. Nobody grudges him his good luck, for "Bill Beresford" is the pet of the army; but then what about rules and regulations? Are they to be looked at sometimes by the authorities in the same way in which Nelson looked at the signal of recall—with a blind eye?

THE Queen has approved the appointment of Lord Reay, G.C.I.E., the retiring Governor of Bombay, to be a Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

THE Government contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company and the Orient Company for the conveyance of the Indian and Australian mails has been published at last. The contract provides for a regular monthly service by the Orient Company from Naples, and by the P. and O. Company from Brindisi to Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney. The time between Naples and Adelaide is 32 days; between Brindisi and Adelaide 32½ days. Each company receives £85,600 per annum, less the deductions—not providing a vessel £250, and £50 for every successive twenty-four hours' delay, the total deduction not to exceed the proportion of the subsidy for the voyage by more than £1,000; for delay on the voyage, £100 for every twenty-four hours behind time. The contracts are for seven years from February 1, 1888. The United Kingdom pays £95,000 per year, and the colonies the remaining £75,000.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 6.

In the absence of more exciting topics, the Budget has occupied a large share of public attention during the past week, and, while its generally satisfactory nature is fully recognised, some features are being severely criticised. Several newspapers charge Sir David Barbour with deliberately under-estimating the revenue in order to avoid any remission of taxation, and maintain that the handsome surplus would have been more usefully employed in lowering the salt and income taxes than in restoring the famine grant. There is also a general feeling that under the circumstances the Supreme Government ought to return the contributions of Rs. 490,000 which in time of distress they exacted from the provincial administrations. The Bengal Government has undoubtedly been greatly hampered by the loss of the ten lakhs which it was called upon to contribute, and the Finance Member's answer to the forcible appeals of the Lieutenant-Governor and the Hon. Mr. Evans for refunding can hardly be called convincing.

Then, again, there is the case for a more liberal expenditure upon the administration of justice, which was put with irresistible strength by Mr. Evans in the recent debate in Council. The figures published last January show the cost of Civil Courts in India to be Rs. 2,140,000, of which all but the small sum of Rs. 120,000 is obtained by taxation of litigants. To take the provinces separately, it appears that the Civil Courts in Bengal not only pay their cost, but give a surplus of 14 lakhs of rupees to general revenue, while in Madras litigants pay for the machinery of the Courts, but yield no surplus. In Bombay litigants contribute two-thirds of the cost and general finances, the remainder amounting to about 10 lakhs, and in other provinces litigants contribute a certain amount of the cost and the Government the rest.

On these figures, as Mr. Evans pointed out, two important questions arise and deserve serious consideration—namely, first, are litigants unduly taxed? And, secondly, does the fact that Bengal shows a surplus, while Bombay shows a deficit, prove that the Bombay establishment is extravagant or the Bengal establishment starved? Complaints which one hears on all sides would seem to indicate that the latter is the more probable supposition. Not only are ministerial officers of subordinate Courts too few and underpaid, but the number of Courts is quite insufficient. Recently Government has sanctioned the appointment of thirty additional Moonsiffs or Civil Judges of lowest grade, but this is less than half of the number demanded by the High Court, and, as Mr. Evans stated, the result is that Moonsiffs are overworked and litigants cannot get their cases tried. The hardship falls with peculiar severity upon landholders, as rent cases form the bulk of the work of the inferior Courts. There can be no doubt in the mind of any one conversant with the state of affairs in the rural districts of Bengal that a substantial grievance exists, and calls for careful inquiry and prompt remedy.

The arrival in India of Lord Cross's Councils Bill and of the report of the debates in the House of Lords has given a fresh impetus to the discussion on the subject which has been going on in the local Press for some weeks past, but there is no change in the division of opinion on the subject. The more extreme Congress agitators and newspapers continue to condemn the measure unsparingly, while the rest of the public and the Press give it general approval. The Indian Spectator, which may be taken as a fair type of the more moderate Native papers, after saying that popular election as suggested by ardent politicians is neither a present necessity nor likely to prove a boon, goes on to remark that if the rules regarding nomination are properly made all reasonable ground of complaint on that head will cease to exist so far as the present and the immediate future are concerned.

The Mahomedan movement against elective institutions is spreading and gaining strength. The National Mahomedan Association of Calcutta sent home by last mail a strong petition on the subject, and, as that body has branches all over India, it may be taken as fairly representing the general feeling of the community. The Mahomedans of Upper India are sending a separate petition, which has already obtained over 2,700 signatures, although the signatures of persons in Government service and those who cannot read and write are rigorously excluded. If nothing else comes from this movement, it at least has had the effect of showing that the small number of Mahomedans who attended the Congress in no way represented the feeling of their co-religionists.

A meeting of the Provisional Committee of the recently formed Society for the Diffusion of Useful Literature in India was held last week, Sir Charles Elliott presiding. The replies of the Supreme and provincial Governments to the appeals for help which had been made to them were read. The former stated that the Governor-General in Council had read the committee's letter with much interest, and the objects of the society met with his cordial sympathy and approval. He promised to grant 500 rupees per mensem from Imperial funds, provided the society was established with a definite programme holding out prospects of success. The Lieutenant-Governor's answer also expressed approval, but added that it would be necessary to ascertain the requirements and probable resources of the society before a grant could be made from provincial funds. The Rev. James Johnston, who came from England to start the movement, gave an account of his success in founding similar societies at Madras, Bombay, Lahore, and Allahabad. He stated that its objects were the cheap reproduction in India of standard English and vernacular works, and to stimulate the habit of reading by establishing libraries. The scheme, he added, had aroused much interest in England, and he suggested the formation of a society in London for the same objects. The Bishop of Calcutta said the lead must be taken in India, and he hoped the proposed English society would be only auxiliary. A sub-committee was then appointed to prepare a scheme of operations, and it was announced that a considerable sum had already been subscribed.

The Calcutta Trades Association have addressed the Bengal Government on the subject of the Factories Bill now pending before the Viceroy's Council. They complain that no information has been given as to the necessity for the proposed legislation, and they strongly deprecate any further action which might tend to injure and depress Indian manufacturing interests. They object to the clause raising the age at which children may be employed, and point out that children are invariably given work of the lightest description, and are, as a rule, brought to factories by their parents, who, being Hindoos, are not likely to overtax their capabilities. With regard to women, the Association have not been able to gather that they are overworked in factories or stand in need of more protection than their sisters who work in fields or at other occupations. They also protest against the importance which the Bill gives to inspectors. The letter concludes by describing the Bill as both unnecessary and objectionable, and praying the Lieutenant-Governor to recommend its withdrawal. There can be no doubt that public opinion throughout India is strongly opposed to the Bill, and it seems to be generally agreed by all persons who have practical acquaintance with the condition of mill-hands in Bengal and Bombay that there is nothing to call for interference by the Legislature, but that, on the contrary, those hands are better fed, better cared for, and more contented than the mass of natives of the same class.

The influenza epidemic continues to spread through India. Hitherto in Calcutta it has been almost entirely confined to the Native quarter, but it is now raging there to such an extent that most offices are short-handed. The Seebpore Engineering College, on the opposite side of the river, has been closed for three weeks, as seventy of the students were attacked. The disease seems to be of a mild type, rarely lasting longer than three days.

The Viceregal Staff is about to lose one of its best known and most popular members—Lord William Beresford—who leaves India in a few days, after having served four successive Viceroys, first as Aide-de-Camp, afterwards as Military Secretary.

The Khojah tunnel is now almost pierced. The last portion of 300ft. proved the most difficult part of the work.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 6.

The services of Mr. Justice Scott, of the Bombay High Court, have been lent to the Egyptian Government for a year, for the purpose of reorganising the criminal Courts of that country. His experience as an Indian Judge for the last seven or eight years, added to that previously acquired as an English Judge of Appeal in the International Tribunals at Alexandria, eminently qualifies him for this difficult and responsible duty. He leaves for Egypt on Friday.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, APRIL 5.

Some petty skirmishing has taken place with the Chin tribes on the Letha Range. Two privates of the 42nd Goorkhas were killed and one was wounded. The column under Colonel Elliston discovered and destroyed a large quantity of corn concealed by the Chins.

The wing of the 4th Goorkhas, consisting of five British officers and 344 men, has arrived at Haka from Chittagong. The column under Brigadier-General Symons starts to-day on a reconnaissance from Haka to explore the valley through which the main stream of the Koladine flows. A mountain 8,400ft. high has been discovered twenty-five miles south of Haka.

The correspondent of the Rangoon Times at Haka telegraphs some facts showing how severely the troops constituting the Chin-Lushai Field Force have suffered from illness. According to official returns furnished by Brigade-Surgeon Markey, the principal medical officer with the force, on March 27th there were under treatment in all the hospitals of the northern and southern columns on the Burma side, including the base and line of communication, 11 officers, 86 British troops, 281 Native troops, and 994 followers. These statistics do not include any sick previously sent away from the front or the base hospitals. Up to the 21st of March 34 officers in all had been invalidated. The inability of the men to resist sickness is undoubtedly largely due to causes connected with the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 5.

The following official report of recent occurrences in the territory of the Tsawbwa of Thebaw has been published. The officials of the Thebaw territory wrote to Lieutenant Daly, Superintendent of the Shan States, reporting that the Tsawbwa had left his palace and his whereabouts was unknown. Lieutenant Daly, who was proceeding to Mainlong, went to Thebaw, and near the town met the Tsawbwa, who accompanied him. The Tsawbwa stated that he was dissatisfied with the terms of the patent appointing him Tsawbwa, especially as to the assertion by the Government of their rights over the teak forests, and he wished to resign his position in favour of one of his minor children. Lieutenant Daly remained a week at Thebaw. As the Tsawbwa still persisted in his resignation he reported the matter to the Chief Commissioner, who requested the Tsawbwa to consider before finally resigning. It is hoped the Tsawbwa will withdraw his resignation. It is denied that there is any prospect of disturbance in Thebaw. The Tsawbwa's resignation was quite unexpected.

A large fire broke out at Pegu, and 200 Native houses were burnt.

The influenza is prevalent in Rangoon.

Lady Crosthwaite leaves for England by the next mail.

SIAM.

RANGOON, APRIL 5.

In Siam a complete change appears to have occurred in the policy of the Government as to public works and railways. The project of granting a concession to a syndicate to construct 500 miles of railway is reported to have been abandoned. The reason of this change of policy is not known. Numerous mining concessions are, however, being granted to Europeans of various nationalities. The value of some of these concessions is problematical.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE CHITTAGONG RAILWAY.

(Rangoon Times.)

The prospects of the port of Chittagong seem brightening. The new Railway which is to start from that place to Dhubri will pass through Silhet and Cachar, and some of the most densely-populated districts in India to the tea districts of Assam. A large part of the tea and jute which now goes to Calcutta will find its way to Chittagong instead. The concession for the line has been given to Sir Theodore Hope, the late Public Works Member of Council, who is to raise a capital of six crores of rupees for laying the line. No money guarantee is to be given, but the land for the rail is to be given free, as well as five square miles of land for every mile of rail laid, or 30,000 square miles in all; as well as the exclusive right to work coal and petroleum in a selected area of thirty square miles. It is believed that the Burma line may eventually be connected with this Chittagong-Assam line, but at what point is not yet known. We believe Mr. Buyers, the Engineer-in-Chief of the Mu-Valley Railway, has had the offer of the Engineer-in-Chiefship of the Chittagong-Assam line, he having been Chief of the survey. He goes home next month, however, on eight months' leave, and will very possibly return as Engineer-in-Chief of the Chittagong-Assam line. We have not heard who will succeed him in Burma.

N.W.P. MUNICIPALITIES.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The elective system, as applied to municipalities in the North-West, seems to work as well as can be expected, seeing it is a plant of comparatively recent growth. In all, there are 109 municipalities in the Provinces, and of these 101 can boast of possessing an electoral body, which is registered in duo form, and which numbers one voter for every sixty-six of the municipal population. Last year the electoral machine was set going in seventy-three municipalities, and according to the Report on the subject "considerable interest appears to have been generally taken in the exercise of the privilege of voting." The same thing is put statistically elsewhere by calculating at 46½ per cent. of the whole electorate those who actually voted. Of course the interest varied in different places, in some being apparently at white heat (judging by the figures), and perilously near the point of electoral frenzy represented by the maximum of actual voters. In Dhanpur the percentage of actual voters was 95.5; in Bulandshahr, 95.1; in Ujanhi, 94; in Budaun, 83.5. In these places the excitement (for the East) must have run very high indeed. On the other hand, there were places where the interest fell, if not to zero, very near it. At Kasganj only 15.6 voters could be got to the polls; at Banda there were even fewer; and at Gorakhpur only 9.2 men were found to speak for the local appreciation of the franchise. On the whole, however, it is not otherwise than satisfactory to find almost half the registered voters in the Provinces duly exercising their electoral functions—let it be hoped without any pressure from without.

DECLINE OF DACOITY IN BURMA.

(Pioneer.)

It may have been noticed as a significant sign of the complete pacification of Upper Burma that during the current cold season, now drawing to an end, there has scarcely been a report of dacoity operations in the country. In the Pegu Yomas the pursuit of probably the only large band of dacoits was begun in December, and a few skirmishes with them took place; but for some weeks past nothing more has been heard of their movements, and the majority of them are now fugitives in the jungles. The great stretch of country from the old border line north of Thayetmyo and Tounghoo is in as peaceful a state as an Indian Province, and travellers returning from a visit to Mandalay and other towns can scarcely be brought to believe that the people were ever in general revolt against authority. And yet it may be remembered that in the earlier stages of our occupation dacoit bands fired large stations, tried indeed to destroy Mandalay itself, besieged small outposts, and harried villages on every hand. When it was proposed to impose disarmament on a large scale, the cry was raised that we were leaving the peaceful inhabitants at the mercy of the criminal classes; when the punishment of compulsory emigration was inflicted upon villagers who had harboured dacoits, indignation was expressed at such a coercive measure. The worst results, it was said, would follow a policy of this kind, and discontent on a large scale would be excited. Sir Charles Crosthwaite and Sir George White, as representing the civil and military administrations respectively, were, however, strong in their determination to stamp out organised dacoity as an institution which the majority of Burmans regarded with a certain feeling of respect. They aimed at breaking the strange bond of sympathy between the members of lawless bands and the people as a body; and this has most certainly been accomplished. . . . Upper Burma is now enjoying the first fruits of that peaceful settlement which seemed so hard of attainment during the first two years of our occupation; complaints of oppression and injustice are practically unknown; and the Burmans themselves are ceasing to regret the past. Sir Charles Crosthwaite and the officials under his orders have had to suffer detraction and even obloquy while they were engaged in the work of pacification, but an impartial observer must acknowledge that if they had been deterred from their duty they would still be struggling against those lawless forces which were set free four years ago, and threatened the whole country with anarchy.

THE COTTON TRADE.

(Indian Daily News.)

The telegram which has been received from Bombay indicates that the cotton trade is being overdone in India as well as in England, and, besides the movement for a Factories' Act in the interests of Lancashire, there is some probability of a voluntary short-time movement in Bombay which will not be without interest to the millowners in England. There is no mistake about the short-time movement, if it be really contemplated to close the mills more than one-fourth of the working hours. This would be a very drastic measure, though we fail to see how it could be expected to benefit the Bombay millowners. If they restrict the production in order to keep up the price, they thereby give so much advantage to Lancashire to command the market, unless the English millowners are placed under the like restriction as to production. From the statements made at Bombay it seems clear that production has more than overtaken demand, with the effect of leaving large unsold stocks, which mean inevitably lower prices. The stocks of yarn in China and Japan are said to be about 80,000 bales, besides others afloat, and probably considerable stocks in the mills. The above quantities may not be inordinately great for the wants of the countries named. But the facts seems clear that production is in excess of the requirement, and if continued at the same rate it can only tend to further depression. The alternative to short time, say the Bombay millowners, is to work at a loss. But that cannot be done indefinitely, and the position seems one not specially favourable to the Indian cotton industry. It is probable that cotton-spinning is being overdone both here and at home, and need for additional markets may account for some of the pushing and aggressive activity observable in Africa and other places, to bring within the scope of commerce populations who have not hitherto been included in the sphere of civilisation so far as to become customers of the millowners and merchants. It may come to a competitive battle between the producers, either as between the two countries or individual producers, and the longest purse may win. Trade cannot go on indefinitely at a loss, and it is only a question of time before it "spells ruin" in such cases. But there is undoubtedly a law which regulates these things. When production ceases to be profitable, it tends to decrease until there is a reaction.

CHAMBA.

A RAJPUT BALLAD OF THE YEAR NINETY A.D.

"By heaven! she is a dainty one."—King Henry VIII.—1. 4.
(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Whence boomed the deep-toned sound of drum upon the startled air?
And whence now comes this warlike tread, and whence these banners fair?
White flashing sword and spear, whose gleam outshines the morning light, While high the sun uprises in the splendour of his might?

Stout footmen lead the cavalcade, or on the stirrup rest
Of horsemen on whose tossing plume, and on whose cuirassed breast,
The red rays glint and sparkle keen, as prance their ardent steeds, While laugh and jest speed fast among the men of gallant deeds.

And, see, on coal-black charger throned, the man of lordly race,
With beetling brow, and eagle eye, and cruel, cold-set face:
What woe to man and maiden now this season shall betide?
Shalvahan 'tis who comes in all the majesty of pride!

Each night the beauty of the land for him a bride supplies,
Each morn, to home and kindred lost, a wife dishonoured lies!
A wail goes up from every hearth; and, with low bated breath,
Each sire and maid and lover keeps the Marriage Feast of Death!

But hark! the word is passed to halt, and on the winding way
The long line stops and lingers slow in bravery of array:
Behold, Shalvahan's evil eye hath swept the country round;
Oh, hath remorseless Fate for him another victim found?

Athwart the broad sun's spreading rays another light appears:
Bright, dawning face and lissome form—the bloom of early years:
Close standing by the wayside well, with passion's dreamful eyes,
And lips sweet-parted, gazed a maid in happy, young surprise.

Shalvahan saw—and loved. Then, straightway sought her of her sire:
Out spoke the haughty Rajput Chief, in tones of veiled ire:
"The falcon, trained for kingly game, is now too meanly flown:
My lands and service are my lord's—my daughter is my own!"

"We brook not rude denial, Chief," Shalvahan stern replied;
"I love thy daughter as my soul, or thou hadst surely died!
Behold, I choose her for my bride, for eight days, morn to morn;
Bethink thee, friend, of thy bold words, nor royal offer scorn."

In grief the Chieftain sought his child—she proudly raised her head—
"Fear not, my father, lest the grave do prove my wedding bed:
The eight days shall be evermore; for Love shall conquer Fate:—
Or if I fail—this friendly blade shall its own tale relate!"

The splendid passion in her eyes illumed her wakened face:
A child new-born to womanhood, with all a queenly grace;
Proud smiled the Chief: "Thy voice rings true—and wide shall be thy fame:
A Rajput maid thou art," he said, "up-bear the Rajput name!"

And now the hateful day hath come: What tidings doth it bear,
For weal or woe to every heart, upon the listening air?
Throughout the land—from hearth to hearth—the joyous news is cried:
Shalvahan yields to Chamba's charms, nor seeks another bride!

And there, where first he loved the maid, to mark the gracious time, Proud fane and street, and orchard rise in all their goodly prime:
And on throughout the centuries the people's voice hath told How Chamba kept her faith, and how Love conquered Fate of old!

A PORTUGUESE QUESTION IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

It appears that the Bombay military authorities have some difficulty in apprehending and punishing Goanese who desert from the Native army and seek protection in the territory of Portuguese India. Under existing treaties, we believe, the Portuguese Government are bound to deliver up these deserters if identified, &c., but this they, apparently, are very reluctant to do. In a recent case of this sort, on information being given by the British authorities, the Portuguese Government apprehended a deserter, but instead of handing him over at once the Portuguese first tried him by a court-martial of their own. This court decided that the crime of desertion had not been proved, and that the man should return to his regiment in Bombay at once under penalty of desertion. This decision was confirmed by the Portuguese Government in India, who then requested that the Bombay authorities should take the man over, not as a prisoner, but simply with a view to his joining his regiment. There does not seem to be the shadow of a doubt that the man really did desert from our Native army, for he was declared to have deserted by a Court of inquiry which assembled in his regiment after he had been he allotted number of days absent from it. Under the Indian Articles of War this declaration is sufficient proof of desertion, so long as the man can be identified. To take the most lenient view of the case, the man must have been at any rate illegally absent, and liable to the usual punishment for such an offence. Yet by the peculiar procedure of the Portuguese Government in India, the man evades the consequences of his crime, for we presume the Bombay authorities can hardly try the man again, as they must receive him back as one innocent of desertion. It seems to us, that it would be preferable not to take the man over at all, for to do so without punishing him for his offence is nothing more nor less than condoning a most serious military crime. Of course, it would be better if the Portuguese Government in India could be induced to act in a more reasonable way in this matter, though this is not to be expected, judging from recent experiences of the policy of the home Government of this hot-headed little nation.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

(Englishman.)

We have lately drawn attention to the fact, that while many benefits have been conferred during the last twenty years upon officers of the British Line temporarily resident in India, the interests of those officers who really belong to India, and have made the magnificent Indian Army what it is, have been neglected. The whole situation was exactly foreseen and foretold by the Indian officers examined before the Indian Commission of 1864. They stated that, if the proposed measure of officering the Native regiments from the Line were adopted, the Native Army and their officers would gradually fall into a subordinate position to the European Army, their interests would be neglected, and much evil would necessarily result. This prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter. The promotion of the officers of the Indian Army of the present day is from four to five years slower in each rank than in the British regiments, and consequently the Indian officers suffer not only supersession in rank, but proportionate loss in pay. There was an agreement made at the time of the amalgamation of the armies that the general Staff appointments should be equally divided between the qualified officers of both services. This agreement has been gradually departed from, until it is now understood to mean that the Staff appointments should be divided between the two services irrespective of the numbers of officers qualified in each; and the effect is to give seven times more Staff appointments to officers of the British Line than they are entitled to by numbers of officers qualified. It is, however, unnecessary to enter into further particulars, for it is a well known fact that every appointment worth having at Army Head Quarters has been gradually taken away from the Native Army. The Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and British Linesmen hold every important military situation on the Staff. No one in particular is to blame for the present state of affairs. The change has been gradual, as the officers who gave evidence before the Commission of 1864 prophesied it would be.

OUR VISIT TO THE FEAST OF THE FULL MOON.

(Madras Times.)

Picture to yourselves a sandy lane, leading down to the sea shore, bordered on each side by a thick casuarina tope very suggestive of our own fir plantations at home, with their soft carpet of fir needles; on each side of this lane extended rows of little booths formed of gaily-coloured cloths or umbrellas, and underneath these, displayed for sale, every conceivable sort of thing. Strings of gaily-coloured beads, rings, bangles, chintz bags, crockery, sweetmeats, toys, brass ornaments, vegetables, herbs, and fruits, were stretching in picturesque confusion. Beyond the line of booths we came to a more dreadful part of the fair, which for the moment spoilt all the charm of varying colour, and dusky forms against the dark grey-green background of trees. For here, on both sides, were squatting or lying, fakirs and beggars with all sorts of deformities—blind, maimed, diseased—begging for alms, and attracting attention to their diseases by beating on round brass plates, and holding out large, curious-shaped bowls and trays for alms. We noticed amongst the little copper coins in one bowl a clumsy, curious-looking ring or two roughly wrought in copper or brass. Some of the fakirs were uncanny to behold. One we noticed—a hoary headed old sinner I was about to say—but his locks were a dirty gruesome yellow, and hung unkept and thick about his face. Round him was wrapped a coarse cloth of the curious salmon tint always affected by these holy men. They had strings of large rough Brahmini beads round their necks, and one woman had twisted them, not un picturesquely, round her head. Each had their own particular form of torment whereby to attain sanctity. One man kept following us with half his purposely reddened tongue hanging out of his mouth, and kept thus by a long silver pin thrust through it at right angles. All sorts of disfigurements greeted our sight, and a woman held out a round basket in which two diminutive babies sprawled and stretched, evidently only a few days old.

A pleasant sight was our cook's little daughter in a gay chintz skirt and jacket, her shining hair plaited and tied at the end with a tassel of yellow chrysanthemums, a crown of the same brilliant flowers on her head. We passed the merry-go-rounds and other arrangements eminently suggestive of switchback horrors, and finally reached the seashore. Here the religious element of the feast was in full swing. From early morning the gods had been carried down in endless succession to this point and placed under huge pandals facing the sea. We went up to see the poojah performed before these yellow daubed images, reclining beneath their canopies of crimson and yellow or purple cloths, and smothered with flowers. An attendant held out a brass tray, on which was some fire, and the people in turn placed on it their offerings of cocoanuts, flowers or betel-nut, which, after waving before the Swami for a few seconds, he laid down beside him, and presented the tray afresh. Away in the surf were hundreds of people bathing, some few of them swimming far out, evidently quite fearless of sharks. This bathing is a very important part of the poojah, and I was amused at the contrivances resorted to by some to evade the dip, and yet to ease their scruples by a base imitation of the ceremony. Near us stood two dripping little sisters just emerged from the sea, their red, soaked clothes clinging to their slender limbs. Gathering up the end of her cloth, one little one wrung it out, and flung the drops gravely over two little friends who stood by, and who evidently did not intend to bathe. She looked down shyly when she saw us observing her, but a few seconds later, thinking our attention was withdrawn, she again commenced flinging friendly showers over her companions.

I was nearly omitting the temple elephant. I do not know whether the Mahant seated on him was merely an attendant or if he was a person of sanctity. The mothers were all crowding round. On payment of a few pice, the man lifted up baby after baby, seated it on the elephant before him, laid it face downwards between the huge ears, and then handed it back to the gratified mother. Imagine how some of the poor wee mites screamed, picture the eager crowd of mothers, each anxious that her babe should derive the mystic benefit arising from that temporary enthronement, and the great clumsy-looking elephant swaying and moving so carefully and harmlessly amongst the densely-packed mass of people. The sweetmeat bazaar drove a roaring trade and was surrounded by troops of little urchins. The fields beyond were like one huge encampment; bandies of every size and shape drawn up, bullocks grazing, women and children seated on the ground combing their hair, little fires lit, over which the midday meal was cooking, and all the time a ceaseless din of tom-toms went on as the Swamies passed and repassed to and from the sea.

No English crowd can present such a brilliant mass of colour—snowy turbans, cloths of scarlet, green and purple, and the dark swarthy faces under the clear blue sky and burning sun presenting a wonderfully bright harmony of colour. After staring at the ever-shifting scene for so long the shade of our own house and its tattied verandahs was most refreshing, and we were glad to return to it. PEDESTRIENNE.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS IN INDIA.

(Englishman.)

We have lately drawn attention to the fact that, while many benefits have been conferred during the last twenty years upon officers of the British Line temporarily resident in India, the interests of those officers who really belong to India, and have made the magnificent Indian Army what it is, have been neglected. The whole situation was exactly foreseen and foretold by the Indian officers examined before the Indian Commission of 1864. They stated that, if the proposed measure of officering the Native regiments from the Line were adopted, the Native Army and their officers would gradually fall into a subordinate position to the European Army, their interests would be neglected, and much evil would necessarily result. This prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter. The promotion of the officers of the Indian Army of the present day is from four to five years slower in each rank than in the British regiments, and consequently the Indian officers suffer not only supersession in rank, but proportionate loss in pay. There was an agreement made at the time of the amalgamation of the armies that the general Staff appointments should be equally divided between the qualified officers of both services. This agreement has been gradually departed from, until it is now understood to mean that the Staff appointments should be divided between the two services, irrespective of the numbers of officers qualified in each; and the effect is to give seven times more Staff appointments to officers of the British Line than they are entitled to by numbers of officers qualified. It is, however, unnecessary to enter into further particulars, for it is a well-known fact that every appointment worth having at Army Head Quarters has been gradually taken away from the Native Army. The Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and British Linesmen hold every important military situation on the Staff. No one in particular is to blame for the present state of affairs. The change has been gradual, as the officers who gave evidence before the Commission of 1864 prophesied it would be.

That the danger of allowing the Native Army to sink into a subordinate service is a very distinct one every reflecting person must at once perceive. It is an open secret that the regiments recruited in Oudh and the North-West have ceased to be reckoned as of equal fighting efficiency with the rest of the Army. Officers who know the Army well say that the cause of this deterioration lies not with the men, but with the officers, and through no fault of their own. In several of the regiments recruited in Oudh the officers are most unhappy, for they are never given a chance of advancement. All the good things of the service go to the officers of the Sikh, Gurkha, and Punjab regiments, and the natural result follows. As it has been in a portion of the Army, so will it probably be with the whole, if the present system is continued by which the interests of the officers of the Indian Army are entirely subordinated to those of the officers of British regiments. The Royal Warrant of 1887 is about to be made applicable to the officers of the Indian Service, and is certain to result in grave injustice to that long suffering body unless closely criticised by the public. The Warrant has been in force for some time in England, and favouritism in selection or jobbing in appointments are the least charges brought against it. It has for years been notorious that the best men are not always selected for Staff appointments, but we are now asked to say that the selection of the military authorities is not only the best, but entitles the man so selected to be promoted to the next military rank over the heads of hundreds of his seniors in the rank he was selected from. There are certain clauses in the Warrant of 1887 which go much beyond the "Take care of Dqwb" stage. This Warrant, if made applicable to India, will finally complete the ruin of all Indian officers. There is a clause in it which lays down that, to hold certain Staff appointments, an officer must be a Lieutenant-Colonel of three years' service; in other words, that an officer, if of the Indian service, must have done twenty-nine years' duty in India, but all officers of that length of service in India are commanding regiments, and would not take Staff appointments; and brevet promotion has been given so sparingly to the Native Army that there are no brevet Lieutenant-Colonels eligible for such appointments. Consequently, the effect of the application of the Warrant would be to throw the whole of the higher class appointments of India to the young Colonels of the British Line, which appears to be a grave injustice to our Indian officers still holding the rank of Major, although of longer service than the Line Colonels. With regard to the clause which stops all promotion beyond the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel we are not at all sure that it can legally be applied to Staff Corps officers without an Act of Parliament. Officers who entered the Staff Corps subsequently to 1881 signed a declaration that they would accept any changes in their service which might be made by the Secretary of State for India, but no such declaration was demanded from officers who engaged for Indian service before that date. We trust the Government of India will examine the effect of the Warrant most narrowly before allowing it to be applied to India.

BENGAL. (March 18.)

THE rate of exchange on London in Calcutta at noon on Monday was 1s. 5½d.

SIR EDWARD BUCK made over charge of the Agricultural Secretariat to Mr. Benett in Calcutta on Wednesday, leaving for England on Thursday.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal returns from Chota Nagpur on the 27th in time to take part in the Budget discussion on the following day.

As at present arranged his Excellency the Viceroy and suite will leave Calcutta on the evening of the 30th inst. for Saharanpur and Dehra, on the way to Simla.

MAJOR ROWAN HAMILTON left Calcutta on the 12th inst. A farewell dinner was given to him on the 10th inst. at the Botanical Gardens by Lord William Beresford.

MR. HORACE BELL, who is now engaged on the Mogul Serai-Purulia Railway survey, succeeds Colonel Luard as Consulting Engineer to the Government of India in Calcutta, when the post becomes vacant in June next or July.

THE total bag made by the Maharajah of Kuch-Bihar's shooting party was ten tigers, fifteen buffaloes, five rhinoceros, and a bear, besides a large number of pig, deer, and small game.

THE Englishman says:—Lord William Beresford, Military Secretary to the Viceroy, has been ordered home on account of ill-health. He accompanies H.E. the Viceroy to Dehra. From thence he will go on to Bombay, leaving in the s.s. Oriental on April 12. He takes six months' leave. Captain H. Streatfeild acts for him.

MADRAS. (March 19.)

HIS Excellency Lord Connemara, G.C.I.E., was to lay the foundation-stone of the new Military Hospital, Madras, on Monday. His Excellency also intends to lay the foundation-stone of the Public Library and Victoria Technical Institute, at the site at the Government Central Museum, Pantheon-road, Madras, on Saturday next.

CAPTAIN B. D. PLUMMER, the Superintendent of the Mysore and Nundydroog Gold Mining Companies, will, it is said, resign next month, and be succeeded by Captain John Gilbert, from Cornwall, a man of mature age and wide experience, who is very favourably known in the British mining world, and to English miners now employed at Kolar.

It will be remembered that some months ago Mr. E. J. Smaller, station master at Bangalore, saved a Native woman from being run over by an approaching train at the risk of his own life. His courageous conduct on the occasion was brought to the notice of the railway authorities and the Government, and he was presented with a gold watch by the former, and a reward of Rs. 200, and a complimentary "G. O." by the latter. The Military Secretary to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught has now forwarded to the Private Secretary to the Governor of Madras a medal to be presented to Mr. Smaller in recognition of his service in the cause of humanity; and his Excellency the Governor, with characteristic kindness, has intimated to Mr. Smaller his desire to present the medal to him in person if he will come to Madras for the purpose. Mr. Smaller is a non-commissioned officer, with the rank of sergeant in the Madras Railway Volunteers; and Lord Connemara, as Honorary Colonel of the Madras Volunteer Guards, could hardly do better than make the presentation of the medal at a Brigade parade of Head Quarters Companies of all the Madras Volunteers.

BOMBAY. (March 21.)

A PROVINCIAL Conference will be held in Poona in the month of May.

MAJOR-GENERAL GILLESPIE, C.B., commanding the Mhow District, left for Mhow on Friday night.

MR. T. M. COTGRAVE has been gazetted Deputy Collector of Salt Revenue, vice Mr. H. A. Acworth, C.S.

MR. M. C. LECKIE is to be First Class Assistant Collector of Salt Revenue, vice Mr. Cotgrave, promoted.

MR. F. H. WARDEN has been appointed, on his return to duty, to act as District Superintendent of Police, Satara.

MR. L. W. D. LANGLEY is appointed to be substantive pro tem. Police Probationer, and to do duty in the Khandeish District.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HOGG, C.B., commanding the Aden District, who came to see the Duke and Duchess off, left for Aden by the P. and O. mail steamer on Friday.

THE acceptance of the resignation of the Hon. Sir Frank Forbes Adam, K.C.I.E., of his office as Additional Member of Council, and the appointment in his place of Mr. A. F. Beaufort, appears in last week's Government Gazette.

MR. F. YORKE SMITH, Registrar of the Diocese, is granted leave to Europe for nine months from the 4th proximo. Mr. A. V. Frere is appointed to act as Registrar of the Diocese during his absence, Mr. F. A. Little acting for Mr. Frere until his return.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, PUNJAB, AND OUDH. (March 19.)

INFLUENZA has spread to an alarming extent in Muttra. It has also made its appearance in Allahabad, the Morning Post regrets to say. "As we anticipated," it is going through the country.

MR. R. L. KER, agent for the Bank of Bengal, Lahore, is transferred to Delhi in place of Mr. J. W. Russell, who is promoted to the grade of Inspector. Mr. Ker will be succeeded at Lahore by Mr. Douglas Burne, who returns from furlough immediately.

A TELEGRAM from Lucknow states that Mr. Sandeman, 17th Lancers, has had a severe fall while tent-pegging there, and sustained concussion of the brain. He is, however, said to be doing fairly well.

THE North-west Government offices close at Allahabad on the 31st for the move to the hills—a date earlier than usual; but part of the Secretariat block is to be made over to the use of the High Court, whose building has become partially uninhabitable and will have to undergo extensive repairs.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 31.

THE CAMBRIDGE MISSION TO DELHI.

MR. BRADLAUGH asked the Under-Secretary for India whether his attention had been drawn to a letter of the Bishop Designate of Durham published in The Times of March 26, respecting the Cambridge Mission to Delhi, in which it was stated that "this work was undertaken at the suggestion of the Indian Government, which had given the site;" and whether this statement was accurate, and, if so, whether this was a departure from the traditional British policy in India of strict neutrality in religious matters.

SIR R. GORST: The "work" referred to by the Bishop Designate of Durham is Stephen's College, Delhi, an educational establishment of the Cambridge Mission. It has always been the practice of the Government of India to make grants in aid to all institutions calculated to promote the education of the people, and this practice has not been found to interfere with the religious freedom which the British Government guarantees.

THE MAHARAJAH SCINDIA.

MR. BRADLAUGH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the telegram of the Governor of India of the 19th of June, 1886, to the late Maharajah Scindia was in reply to the dying request of his Highness that his son should not be placed for instruction under a European tutor; and whether the Secretary of State would lay upon the table the complete text of the letter of the late Maharajah referred to in the previous answer of the Under-Secretary and of my reply thereto.

SIR J. GORST: The character of the request of the late Maharajah Scindia is not correctly described in the question; but it was undoubtedly his wish in June, 1886, that his son, then under ten years of age, should be under Native and not European tutors. This wish was for three years complied with, and the young Maharajah was left during that time under the charge of Native tutors only. He is now thirteen and a-half years of age, and in the judgment of the Government of India his own interests and those of his people require that, while neither his religion nor caste will be in any way interfered with, he shall be under the charge of a British officer. The Secretary of State does not think it in the interest of the public service to lay on the table either the letter or the reply.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Madras Surgeon-Generalship becomes vacant next month by Dr. Bidie's retirement. It is generally expected that Deputy Surgeon-General Farquhar will succeed.

INFLUENZA has broken out among the 2nd Battalion 1st Gurkhas, at Dharmasala. There have been nearly 100 admissions to hospital.

As modifications of the present annual musketry course for British troops are under consideration, corps are not to commence their course for 1890-91 until further orders. Volunteer corps, however, will continue their existing course.

THE regiment of Bengal Infantry which will return from Upper Burma this spring are the 10th, 17th, and 33rd. The 38th from Alipur proceeded in relief of the 10th some time ago. The 11th Madras from Cannanore relieve the 17th and the 33rd, it not being considered necessary to send more Bengal troops to Burma. The strength of the Native Infantry garrison in future will be thirteen battalions.

THREE posts only will be held on the Lushai border this summer, namely, Lungleh, Thanruma, and Darjow Klang. The last-named will be garrisoned by regular troops, the other two by frontier police. It seems doubtful if a post can be established at Haka this spring, as there is scarcely time to collect sufficient stores there for a garrison which would accept to be cut off from the world during the rains.

MAJOR STONE, Superintendent of the Dum-Dum Factory, is to be placed on special duty in England to examine the machinery for making ammunition for the magazine rifle, and to ascertain what new machines will be required for the Dum-Dum and Kirkee workshops. These will be sent out forthwith. A supply of cartridges will be obtained from home pending their manufacture on a large scale in India.

THREE officers of the rank of Commandants in the Madras Army are to be given an opportunity of retiring on the pension they have earned plus £150 per annum as a special allowance. This offer is due to the impossibility of providing for three commanding officers displaced by the conversion of the 10th, 12th and 33rd Madras Infantry into local regiments for Burma, and the excessive number of senior officers in the Madras Staff Corps.

DEPARTURE OF H.M.'s TROOPSHIP MALABAR.

Her Majesty's troopship Malabar, Commander J. G. Jones, sailed for England, with 70 officers, 15 ladies, 14 children, 1,032 men, 73 women, and 192 children, belonging to different regiments. The following are the names of cabin passengers:—

OUR BURMAN LAND LAWS.

The reported grant of a large tract of land adjoining the oil-wells at Yeanangyoung to an English syndicate consisting of Sir Lepel Griffin, Captain Aubrey Patton, Messrs. Kirby and R. Gordon, C.E. (says the Rangoon Times) would apparently show that the Government have decided upon abandoning their recent dog-in-the-manger system for one more in consonance with reason and common sense. It is highly desirable that British capital should be attracted to Burma, and unless every inducement is held out for people to take up land, it is very unlikely that it will come. Some few speculators may make something by reselling such rights as they may obtain to English Companies. But these are minor evils which take place everywhere, and a much greater evil would be to keep the development of the province back. We are, therefore, not disposed to object to the fact that a large tract of land has been given to Sir Lepel Griffin and his brother speculators. But we think the secret and mysterious manner in which it has been granted is highly objectionable. Let every one who desires to invest money in Burma, or obtain land or privileges from Government, be placed on an equal footing. Nothing is likely to be gained from a policy of monopoly and seclusion, whilst a liberal land policy on the part of Government will assist in developing and opening up Upper Burma in a manner which will rival the rapid increase of wealth and trade in Pegu after the second Burmese war. Government cannot hope to do everything themselves. Let them ensure a continuance of pacification and safety for life and property, and the British public will do the rest under good laws. Tapping the source of petroleum in the vicinity of Yeanangyoung would be an event the importance of which would be greater than anything that has happened in Burma since the annexation of Pegu. We wish Sir Lepel Griffin and Company every success in their prospecting for petroleum. But the country is large, and we should like to see at least a dozen rival prospectors working within an area for thirty miles from the Yeanangyoung oil-wells during the next twelve months. The source must be there, but until it is hit upon, we need not hope to rival Russia or America in the production of petroleum. When the source is touched, and the drill has gone down at a thousand feet in a few thousand places in the Yeanangyoung sub-division, it will be found whether Mr. Charles Marvin is correct or not in his sanguine prognostications about the wealth of the oil-producing country in Upper Burma. We have since learnt that the conditions granted to the new syndicate are practically the same imposed in the case of the grant to Messrs. Finlay, Fleming and Co. Dr. Noetling will be deputed to Yeanangyoung to gain any further information regarding the extent of the petroleum area. Each concession applied for will be treated on its merits, and several are now under consideration. The "oil boom," we may hope, will soon be a matter of fact in Upper Burma.

THE PIONEER LIBEL CASE.

The weekly paper, Capital, published in Calcutta, says:—

We are glad to see that the two leading Bombay papers take a sensible view of this trumpety case; the jealousy of the Pioneer shown by some of our contemporaries, has obscured their judgment. The fact that the Pioneer published at Allahabad should be the leading paper in India and tower over the Calcutta papers in the matter of its enterprise, the ability of its writers, the extent of its circulation, and the number of its advertisements, is a bitter pill for them to swallow, and hence, as is exemplified at home in the case of the Times, there is a howl at Mr. Allen, its managing proprietor, which is as uncalled for as it is contemptible.

We quite agree with our Bombay contemporaries that the law of libel requires some alteration; it is simply monstrous that a paper published, say at Quetta, should be summoned to Mandalay to answer an alleged charge of libel on a person resident at Allahabad. The law may suit England, where places are within an easy distance of each other, and the Judges go on circuit, but it is entirely unsuited to India, and should be altered.

The Madras Mail regrets to learn of the illness of Colonel C. J. Smith, R.E., the Joint Secretary to Government, P.W.D. (Railway Branch), and Consulting Engineer for Railways, Madras. On Friday last he was preparing to go and see the Hon. H. E. Stokes, Senior Member of Council, in connection with some railway papers, when he suddenly had a fit and became unconscious. Dr. Branfoot and Dr. Hunt were at once summoned, and afforded immediate medical aid. His illness is attributed to a touch of the sun.

ALL persons who take an intelligent interest in the finances of India will learn with pleasure, says the Englishman, that a new Army Circular has been issued by the Governor-General in Council, consisting of a "revised scale of stationery for station hospitals for British troops and detached sections thereof." Most people who have gone inside of Government establishments have been impressed that the scale of stationery requires to be revised for all of them; and it is immaterial whether the revision be begun in hospitals or elsewhere. The scale is graduated with conscientious care, in twenty sections, according to the number of beds in the hospitals. Blank books of different sizes, and several kinds of paper and envelopes, together with black and red ink and steel pens, are allotted with moderate liberality, although no allowance is made for ink being spilt or being sprinkled about the table and floor, as it is the manner of some writers to do. Proceeding to more durable articles, we find that hospitals with not more than one hundred beds are allowed four needles annually, and one piece of India rubber "once for all." The dateless limit indicated by the word "once for all" suggests a picture of Father Time revisiting some hospital in the far future, and recognising the stained and worn stump of that invaluable piece of rubber which in his green youth he had seen purchased, and placed for very special and occasional use under the lock and key of the head officer. Hospitals with any number of beds, up to two hundred, may have one penknife "once for all," with a hone to make it sharp and a strap to keep it sharp. That this everlasting knife may not lie idle, a hospital with twenty-five beds is to have ten goose-quills a year, or one for each month and six days. A gum-bottle "once for all" may imply that a stone bottle is to be indented for; but when only one gum-brush is allowed for all time, it is a plain intimation that Nature intended the finger to be used for the purpose of a brush. We observe that red tape is served out in lengths of seven yards, but that must be a palpable misprint for seven fathoms.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 1890.

SOWING THE WIND.

THE question of enlarging the Indian Councils either in accordance with the proposals of the Ministerial Bill, or in accordance with the wishes of the National Congress party, is causing plenty of discussion and differences of opinion amongst the Native community in India who have taken any interest in the matter. Lord Cross's Bill is likely, it is said, to cause a radical split among the supporters of the Congress. Sir Madhava Rao has written a letter to one of the Madras papers, in which he says:—"If Lord Cross's Council Bill pass, as it would seem likely, would it not be well for our political agitation to come to a quiet and dignified close? The good and disillusioned Mr. Hume will probably not return to India. Mr. Surendranath Banerji will probably retrace his steps to the radiant plains of Bengal, no doubt a wiser and a sadder man. Let all the sensible men in India lapse into the normal life." This is excellent advice, and, coming from Sir Madhava Rao, of whom the Congress delegates from Southern India made such boast of having converted to the National cause, ought to carry weight. But, unfortunately for the agitators, Sir Madhava Rao is believed to be a man who has the courage of his opinions, and having no private ends to serve, his withdrawal from the Congress now will only subject him to the vituperation of the Vernacular Press. For, as an Indian contemporary puts it, Sir Madhava Rao joined the Congress movement from a conviction that it was for the good of the country, whereas the majority of his colleagues joined it for the good of themselves.

Already the vials of Native wrath are being uncorked and poured out against Lord Cross's Bill. A writer in the Hindu advises every Indian gentleman to refuse any nomination to the Councils until a satisfactory elective system be granted. And this is how the mild-mannered Hindu would proceed to secure this desired end:—"I would honeycomb India with political associations. I would have Indian politicians constantly before the public in England. I would expose every job, assail every indiscretion until in despair at our importunity, if not in recognition of the justice of our prayer, England should determine a system which is paralysing the peoples of India, and constitutes authority here uncontrolled and irresponsible!" These be "brave words" indeed, and would almost lead one to think that if the martial spirit is dying out amongst the warlike tribes of Northern India it is being born again in the breasts of the quill-driving fraternity of Lower Bengal. But no; Babú, though he writes daggers, means none. The veneer of English education which the kindly British rule has put upon him has given him—as Junius said of Sir William Draper—"an unlimited command over the most beautiful figures of speech." Babú merely desires to let off literary fireworks for the admiration of his less gifted readers. He knows well that if he were granted the Home Rule for which he declares his aspiring soul pants, it would be a very bad thing for Babú, indeed—unless some neighbours of the Mahomedan and other persuasions were removed or deprived of any power to interfere with the mild Hindu. But so long as he thinks he can get an audience for his utterances, or readers for his lucubrations, so long will he continue to talk or write in the King Cambyse's vein—and so long will a foolish or mischievous minority of Englishmen here try and persuade their fellow-countrymen that this miserable creature is a chosen representative of the feelings of the millions of India.

It is satisfactory to find that the Vernacular Press of Bengal is not wholly of the aspiring Babú's way of thinking, and that the higher class organs of Hindu orthodoxy support Lord Lansdowne in his contention that the elective principle should not be introduced. They hold that the English system of election is not suited to the country in its present state; that its introduction would do more harm than good, and that only when the influence of caste and religion had ceased to operate will it be advisable to try the experiment. The Pioneer, commenting on these facts, explains the feelings of the high Brahmin classes and the leaders of the Mahomedan and Sikh communities in the matter, and all Englishmen who have any real knowledge of Native feeling must allow that the explanation is a correct one. These leaders of Native society "have in all three instances," says the Allahabad paper, "that pride of social place and authority among their fellows which will prevent them from canvassing for votes in an election. Defeat at the ballot boxes, too, by men of lower status would injure them far more seriously than English reformers, ignorant of the peculiar conditions of Indian life, can possibly realise. In Western countries a candidate who is beaten at an election, whether Parliamentary or municipal, retires with no stigma attached to him, and renews the contest at the earliest opportunity. In India, a man of influence among his caste fellows or co-religionists would, if his claims to be elected to this or that council were rejected, feel humiliated, if not actually disgraced." It may be urged that this is an argument based on sentiment. It is, however, based on human nature—Native human nature, too. "Again," as our contemporary points out, "in the case of a Mahomedan being defeated by a Sikh or Hindu, or vice versa, enmity and race hatred would be excited, and widespread mischief might be caused. The higher the parties were in their own circles the deeper would be the animosity excited, and the discontent thus created would naturally be directed as much against the Government as against the rival faction."

These facts must be looked in the face; they may be sentimental ones, but to ignore them would be foolish, nay, dangerous. It would be to sow the wind—only to reap the whirlwind.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by analysis (organic substances being destroyed in the process), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "DOSES COMPOUND OF CHLORODYNE CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From Sir Wm. Thackeray, M.D., F.R.C.S., Pharmaceutical Chemist, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNBROUDED IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, is, 1ld., 2s., 9d., and 4s. 6d.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, S. Gt. Russell St. W.C.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knows things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your troy efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, the action is as simple as a to-mato, whole meal bread or porridge, with scalded milk; you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced life they are everything you could wish. Real Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other dangerous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 28th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 26th March; and from Calcutta to the 25th March.

THE annual Financial Statement, in its complete form, was submitted to the Viceroy in the usual course on 19th March. There was no attendance of the public as usual to listen to the summary read by Sir David Barbour. Half-an-hour only was occupied in the reading, and the Council at once adjourned for a week.

At the Viceroy's Council on March 21st the Hon. Mr. Scoble moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Guardians and Wards Bills be taken into consideration. The Hon. Mr. Evans said the success of the measure would depend very much on the discretion with which it was worked by District Officers. If worked with discretion he hoped it would prove successful, but it would be open to considerable liability to abuse on different points if that discretion was not exercised. The Hon. Raja Durga Churn Laha stated that the Bill, as revised by the Select Committee, would protect the interests of minors. The Bill was then passed; as were also the Printing Press Bill, the Cruelty to Animals Bill, and Railways Bill. The Bill for raising the import duty on spirits from five to six rupees per gallon was introduced, and passed through all the stages.

THE Committee on the Merchandise Marks Act in Calcutta has completed its labours. It is understood the rules will be framed on the basis of a liberal rather than a literal interpretation of the provisions of the Act.

THE Indian Factory Act Amendment Bill has been postponed till next cold weather session, there being no urgent need for passing a measure chiefly relating to compulsory holidays when most of the mills at Bombay and Calcutta are working half-time.

THE Local Governments are being consulted on the proposed Lepers Bill with a view to ascertaining what machinery is available for segregating the victims of leprosy, and what provision could be made in the way of asylums were the principle of segregation adopted.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal will not leave Calcutta for Darjeeling this year until the end of May.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SYMONS, commanding the Chin Field Force, proceeds to England on leave in June; and seldom can a rest have been better earned, observes the Pioneer. With all the responsibilities of command he has worked physically like any private to push his way through the jungles and carry out the programme of the expedition, which as far as his column was concerned was accomplished on the day he marched into Haka.

MR. DYSON officiates as Judicial Commissioner of Oudh for Mr. W. Young, when the latter relieves Mr. Tyrrell on the High Court Bench next week; while Mr. Burkitt, Judge of Gorakhpur, acts as Additional Judicial Commissioner in place of Mr. Dyson. Mr. Evans, Judge of Fyzabad, goes to Gorakhpur to officiate for Mr. Burkitt.

MR. E. H. RUDDOCK resigns the Bengal Civil Service from April 11th.

MR. F. BEACHCROFT will officiate as Judge of the Punjab Chief Court during the absence of Mr. Roe on furlough.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL RICE is gazetted Surgeon-General with the Government of India from the 29th inst. Dr. Richardson succeeding him as Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, N.W. Provinces.

BRIGADE-SURGEON PILCHER is appointed Deputy Surgeon-General of the Central Provinces.

SIR HARRY PRENDERGAST, Resident at Baroda, takes three months' leave, Colonel Jackson officiating for him.

COLONEL ABBOTT, from Jhalawar, and Mr. Martindale, from Indore, officiate respectively as Resident at Gwalior and Political Agent at Bhopal during the absence on leave of Major Barr and Lieut. H. Wylie.

MAJOR C. E. YATE, Political Agent, Muscat, is transferred to the Biluchistan Agency.

COLONEL C. J. SMITH, Consulting Engineer to the Madras Government, proceeds home immediately.

PREPARATORY to retiring Colonel Conway-Gordon remains on in his appointment for some time to come, as a good deal of work has to be done in carrying out the provisions of the new Railway Act.

COLONEL J. P. STEEL, R.E., Chief Secretary in the Public Works Department, N.W. Provinces, proceeds home on leave at the end of May.

COLONEL W. G. CUMMING, R.E., Chief Engineer in the Public Works Department, Burma, proceeds on three months' leave, Mr. J. W. Wright from the Punjab acting.

MAJOR S. C. TURNER, R.E., officiates for Colonel Nicholson as Assistant Adjutant-General at Army Headquarters.

MR. BALDWIN LATHAM, the English sanitary expert who was recently employed by the Bombay authorities and is at present in Cairo, will visit the North-West Provinces in October to consult with the local authorities, regarding the proposed drainage scheme for Benares.

It has been decided that Colonel Mallock shall make over charge of his appointment as Director-General of Telegraphs, and proceed afterwards on special duty to the Telegraph Conference at Paris.

In the case of Major Creighton, Army Pay Department, who was tried by court-martial at Secunderabad, and sentenced to imprisonment last August, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge has set aside that portion of the sentence which awarded the forfeiture of medals and decorations, both of which are to be restored on the expiry of his imprisonment.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire broke out at the Simla Main Bazaar early on the morning of March 24th. The flames made a sweep up the Mall, burning the Municipal Market, the old theatre, and Messrs. Davies' Commission Rooms. The loss is estimated at ten lacs.

At a service held at Ranchi on Sunday morning, March 23rd, the Rev. Mr. Whiteley was consecrated first Bishop of Chota Nagpur by the Bishop of Calcutta, the Bishops of Bombay and Lahore also taking part in the ceremony.

CONSEQUENT on the retirement of Mr. Fraser, the Directors of the Bank of Bombay have confirmed Mr. James Hume Sleight in the appointment of Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank, and Mr. Andrew Murray as Deputy Secretary and Treasurer.

LADY HARRIS arrived in Bombay by the mail steamer on Monday, March 24th, and after visiting T.E. Lord and Lady Reay at Government House, left for Mahabaleshwar in the afternoon.

CAPTAIN ALLGOOD, of the King's Royal Rifles, was killed while playing in a polo tournament at Ahmedabad, on March 22nd.

SURGEON THOMSON, of the 10th Bombay Light Infantry, was killed by a tiger in the Satpura jungles on Sunday, March 23rd.

COLONEL BRODIE KETCHEN, who was in command of the Nayar Brigade, Travancore, is dead.

NOTES.

LORD HARRIS has arrived at Bombay, and taken over the government of that presidency from Lord Reay. In India it is always the custom to welcome the coming and to speed the parting guest; so, of course, addresses of congratulation were ready for the new Governor the moment that he landed, and farewell eulogies were bestowed upon his predecessor as he was leaving. But the good opinions which Lord Reay carries home with him come chiefly from Native sources. The Europeans in the Western city and Presidency, and throughout India generally, have come to pretty much the same conclusion regarding him as a ruler. He meant well, but his good intentions led in the wrong direction.

The Pioneer, in the course of a severe criticism on his administration, writes:—"The five years' retrospect seems to present to view a series of blunders succeeding each other with kaleidoscopic variety and resources. Not the least of these mistakes were the attack on the Bombay Bar, which was followed by an apology, and the unjustifiable aspersions on the Parsee community, which led to a mass meeting to demand reparation. Oft repeated experience seems to have brought no lesson of warning, for the very end of the retiring Governor's term of office has been signalled by a gratuitous affront to the Bombay University, and a slur on an high official so unmerited as to cause a Revenue Commissioner to resign the service under a Government which he could no longer respect. Lord Reay has been exceptionally successful in provoking unnecessary difficulties in almost every branch of the Presidential Administration, and seems to have allowed jealousy of his own reputation for independence to become transmuted into jealousy of subordinates who could have enlightened him to more purpose than certain self-professing exponents of public opinion."

THE Lord Mayor of London having addressed a letter to the Commander-in-Chief in India inviting his Excellency to join the Mansion House Committee, formed for the purpose of collecting funds for a suitable memorial in London to Lord Napier of Magdala, and suggesting at the same time that subscriptions should be raised among officers and soldiers in India for the same purpose, Sir Frederick Roberts, in reply, has expressed the honour and pleasure which it will give him to assist in commemorating the distinguished services of his late gallant commander. He has sent copies of the Lord Mayor's letter to the Commanders-in-Chief of Madras and Bombay, and to all commanding officers, but he has ruled that no official notice is to be issued to the Army, as a fund was raised in India in April, 1876, when Lord Napier left for England, to which fund officers and men contributed liberally, the result being the handsome statue which now occupies a prominent place in Calcutta.

In acting thus Sir Frederick Roberts has shown tact and discretion. A notice from Army Headquarters, inviting soldiers to subscribe for any purpose, would, of course, be looked upon as a command. In the late Lord Napier of Magdala the soldiers of India, European and Native, had a true friend ever anxious for their well-being, and ready to promote their interests by every means in his power. Tommy Atkins must, therefore, hold his memory in high regard, but the Lord Mayor of London was not wise in his well-meaning endeavour to swell the Napier Memorial Fund to get a little official pressure to bear on Atkins so that he might subscribe to it. He (Atkins) was invited, if we mistake not, to subscribe to a Queen's Jubilee Fund, and did so in India and elsewhere; but it is better to allow him to follow the dictates of his own feelings, which it seems he has already done in subscribing liberally towards the erection of the statue to Lord Napier of Magdala now in Calcutta.

We wonder what the War Office and Admiralty will say to the following serious charges regarding the neglect of the defences of Bombay, to which the Duke of Connaught alluded before leaving India:—"The conclusion which the general public might draw from the remarks of the Duke of Connaught at the Yacht Club," writes the Pioneer, "is that the Government of India are responsible for the incompleteness of the defences of Bombay. But the fact is that for years past the military authorities have been incessant in their applications to the Home Government for guns for the forts, gunners to work them, and crews for the ships which are supposed to supplement the land defences. That their demands have been treated with something like contemptuous indifference, particularly by the English Ordnance Department, has long been notorious. Guns ordered for India were, when ready, calmly appropriated for the use of the Navy; orders for others were not allowed to be placed independently with private firms; and repeated requisitions for artillery of the most improved pattern were disregarded. The question of manning the forts and the ships is not one which has been overlooked as the citizens of Bombay might imagine. It has been dealt with as an important part of the general scheme of coast defences, but no responsive reply has been given by the War Office or the Admiralty to the representations made on these points. The large sums spent by the Indian Government within the last few years on the fortification of the principal seaports affords an indication of their earnestness in the matter, and the blame cannot rest upon their shoulders if the forts which have been built are still only partially armed. They have year by year, in a time of sore pressure, provided the money required for the purchase of the necessary artillery, but as they cannot go into the open market they must await the pleasure of the Home authorities before a single gun can be mounted. The responsibility for defects which exist in the coast defences of India should, at any rate, be fixed upon the right persons, and the public may judge for themselves who these are."

A PARSEE gentleman, named Mr. Jehangeer Hormusjee Kothari, who is on a tour to Europe, has been writing a series of letters in the columns of the Rast Goftar, giving topographical and historical descriptions of the different places and their people. Having recently explored Iceland and other places which have never before been visited by any native of India, Mr. Kothari visited the different cities of Russia. After describing at length the difficulties of a traveller touring in Russia, the arbitrary action of the post offices in not delivering newspapers published in foreign territories, and the despotic control exercised on the liberties of speech and action of the people by the State, Mr. Kothari says as follows:—"Having seen the different cities of Russia and observed the manners and customs of the people of that country, and having also seen and heard about the ways in which that country has been governed, one cannot but be convinced of the benign rule of the British Government under whose sway we have not only the liberty of speech and action, pure and undefiled justice, but, above all, the enjoyment of every comfort and convenience of life. The British rule is comparatively a great blessing. While crossing the Russian boundary we most sincerely and fervently prayed to God that the protection of the British Government, under whose rule we are permitted to enjoy the sweets of life, may continue for ever. It was only when the boundary was crossed that we felt ourselves free men again." Congress organs please copy.

OWING to ill-health Mr. Fraser has been obliged to resign his position as Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bombay. Mr. Fraser went out to the old Bank of Bombay nearly thirty years ago, and did good service to that institution as Agent at Kurrachee and Inspector of Branches. When the new Bank of Bombay was started, in 1867, he was appointed Deputy Secretary and Treasurer, but was for some time the acting Secretary, and consequently had a leading part in the early and difficult days of the new bank. Ultimately the late Mr. Balfour was appointed Secretary, and on his retirement Mr. Fraser naturally succeeded him. It is not too much to say, writes a Bombay contemporary, that no institution could have been more carefully managed than the Bank of Bombay has been during the years of Mr. Fraser's tenure of office, and the high price of the shares is an eloquent testimony of the opinion of the public. We trust that a brief sojourn in his native country will restore Mr. Fraser to robust health.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to an Indian contemporary:—"Let the Madras Presidency never be called 'the benighted' any more. Who, after our last experience, would venture to assert it behind the age? We were strolling about a certain well-known hill station when we came upon a humble dhoby village. A stream ran conveniently beside it, and in this, knee deep, stood the inhabitants, industriously lancing our dress shirts upon the stones, and pounding out our very newest collars. Probably they were not ours, but we had a fellow-feeling for their owners as we watched the trying process. Above the village on a level piece of turf was pitched a neat tent, and in front of this was a well-marked out and regulation netted tennis-court. 'Who,' we asked of a passer-by, 'uses a tennis-ground in such a curious situation?' The reply was somewhat startling: 'Oh, that is where the dhobies play tennis of an evening after work is over.' This answer was given in all good faith, and truthfully, as we discovered by subsequent inquiry. What we should like to know is, do the dhobies of Calcutta and Bombay play tennis; or is this sign of enlightenment confined to the 'benighted Presidency?'"

In the Gazette of India of the 22nd March there appears a well-merited commendation of an excellent public servant:—"Mr. Gay, the present Comptroller-General, is about to leave India, and will probably not resume his public duties. He has held the important office of Comptroller and Auditor-General for five years; he has enjoyed the complete confidence of the Government during that period, and has discharged the responsible, anxious, and onerous duties of that office to its complete satisfaction. The Governor-General in Council cannot allow the opportunity to pass without placing on record his high appreciation of the public services rendered by Mr. Gay."

THEIR Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne will probably arrive on the 3rd proximo at Dehra, where they will remain for about a fortnight before proceeding to Simla.

COLONEL C. Y. SMITH, Royal Engineers, whose serious illness has already been reported, left Madras by the steamer Bengal on one year's furlough, an immediate change to Europe being considered necessary by his medical advisers, Drs. Branford and Hunt. Major William Henry Cooper, Royal Engineers, will probably act for him.

BEFORE his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught left Bombay he visited the Colaba Soldiers' Institute. He has since presented the members with a portrait of himself, which they have had framed by Messrs. Thacker and Company. To commemorate the incident the name of the institute has been changed to "The Soldiers' Connaught Club."

COLONEL CHARLES WALKER STREET, whose death was recorded last week, entered the Madras Army in 1853, joined the Staff Corps in 1861, and was promoted to colonel in 1883. He entered the Burma Commission in 1859, and was appointed secretary to the Chief Commissioner in 1875. In 1879-80 he was despatched to the court of Zimmé on a political mission. In 1881 he was appointed Commissioner of Pegu, during the tenure of which office he was actively engaged in suppressing the rebellion that broke out in Lower Burma in 1886.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 13.

Yesterday Lord Reay handed over the Government of Bombay to Lord Harris and left India. A few days previously he presided for the last time at a meeting of the Provincial Legislature, and took the opportunity to thank the members for the services they had rendered, and for the consideration he had always experienced at their hands. The Council, he added, would soon have its sphere of usefulness widened, but if the same dignified methods of debate were observed which had hitherto been one of its leading features, it would continue to command general respect.

A public meeting held on Wednesday, under the presidency of the Hon. Mr. Beaufort, decided to place a marble statue of Lord Reay in the city to serve as a perpetual memorial of one who had been connected with many beneficial measures and useful institutions. It was also resolved to ask the Governor to approve such other appropriate memorial, having a similar object, as might be determined. Several farewell addresses were presented to the retiring Governor and Lady Reay during the week, among others one by a deputation of Native ladies representing the Women of India Memorial Fund, who waited on Lady Reay on Wednesday. Her ladyship in replying said that, looking back over the past five years, she felt she ought to have done more, but at the beginning she wasted time through sheer ignorance. She knew of no country where one had so much to learn before one could begin to act. Human sympathy was the only guide till experience came to one's aid.

The embarkation yesterday afternoon was made the scene of a farewell demonstration by the Native community. An address was presented by the Corporation, but it is stated that few Europeans other than officials were present. The public meeting on Wednesday is also said to have been almost purely Native.

Notwithstanding these parting demonstrations, and notwithstanding the undoubted amiability, honesty, and learning of the man, impartial critics must pronounce Lord Reay's administration a failure. Few statesmen have ever ruled an Indian province who have studied science and politics more closely, and no statesman ever displayed greater inability to apply to apply his knowledge to practical affairs. He leaves in the civil departments a feeling of intense dissatisfaction owing to arbitrary supercessions and violation of the traditions of the services. Two commissions to inquire into the conduct of two Civil Servants of high standing have been prominent features of Lord Reay's term of office. In the first case the accused was found guilty by two commissioners who were not professional lawyers, but was subsequently acquitted by the Secretary of State on the advice of the Lord Chancellor. In the second case a thoroughly competent tribunal acquitted the accused of personal corruption, but he was dismissed the service for improper borrowing. In both cases the local government blundered. In the first case Lord Reay was severely rebuked by the Secretary of State for writing a letter to the accuser before the home authorities had passed a final decision, while in the second case his illegal guarantee to the Mamlutdars did not meet the approval of the Supreme Government or the India Office, and his attempt to retain those men in judicial office shocked the public conscience. It is true that some of the more extreme Native newspapers and politicians attempted to defend the action of the Bombay Government in this matter, but the older and wiser of the Native community felt that any palliation of the conduct of the erring Mamlutdars would be an admission that our higher education had not produced the results expected of it.

Even as an educational reformer Lord Reay disappointed the Native community. His indiscreet attempt to abolish the Deccan College led them to suppose that he was no friend of higher education, while his contemptuous treatment of the Bill which was meant to place the local university on a broader and more liberal basis confirmed this opinion. The failure of Lord Reay's administration ought to warn future Indian Governors not to despise local experience, and to teach them that the head of a Government should be guided by his constitutional advisers.

Lord Harris arrived at Bombay on Thursday afternoon, and on landing was received by a number of civil and military officers and leading citizens. An address of welcome was read by the president of the corporation. Lord Harris, in replying, referred to the great and growing trade of Bombay, and said the welfare and prosperity of the people would always receive his close attention. He also alluded to the question of the armament of the great ports and coaling stations, stating that the Home Government was not indifferent to the matter, and that the delay in issuing guns arose from the necessity of rigid inspection and careful proof during the process of manufacture.

Sir Madhava Rao has requested that his name may be removed from the standing committee of the National Congress. He gives no reason, but it can hardly be doubted that the step is due to a difference of opinion between himself and the Congress leaders regarding the introduction of elective institutions in India. Nearly all the Native aristocracy and the older and more influential members of the Hindoo community are in entire accord with Sir Madhava Rao on this subject, but few of them have the courage of their opinions to the same extent, and fear of the abuse which the violent section of the Native press pours on its political opponents hinders most of them from speaking out.

The petition against election which the Mahomedans of Upper India are preparing to lay before Parliament now numbers over 10,000 signatures. Having regard to the fact that only the signatures of persons able to write are accepted, and that those form a very small proportion of the Mussulman community, the number goes far to prove that Mahomedan opinion is opposed to Mr. Bradlaugh's proposals.

The Indian newspapers give particulars regarding the charge brought against the Bombay police by the Novoe Vremya of having detained a party of Russians on their way to Abyssinia. It appears that the men gave such conflicting accounts of themselves as to render it doubtful whether they really were members of an expedition. Moreover, they had rendered themselves liable to prosecution by having arms concealed among their baggage. They were only detained until the orders of the Government could be received, and then were allowed to proceed on their way without further molestation.

The official forecast of the wheat crop states that the failure of the winter rains told severely on the unirrigated crops of the Punjab, the North-Western Provinces, and Oude, and an indifferent harvest is expected in about half the total area sown in those provinces. In Bengal the conditions are better than last year as regards both area and outturn. In the Central Provinces an average crop on an average area is probable. In Berar a smaller area than usual was sown, and a poorer outturn is expected. In Bombay there is a considerable decrease of area, and the Deccan crop will be short, but a fair harvest is expected in Goojerat and the Carnatic. In Scinde a larger area was sown, and the prospects are favourable.

Influenza is now raging in Calcutta to such an extent as seriously to interfere with public and private business. A large number of the police force are incapacitated for duty. Fifty per cent. of the employés of the Bengal Government Press are on the sick list, and from 20 to 40 per cent. in other public offices and in the establishments of private firms. Cases are daily postponed in the law courts owing to the parties or the witnesses being unable to attend. The magistrate of Howrah, on the opposite side of the river, was obliged to close the court for some days, as 17 out of his 23 subordinates were laid up with the malady. It seems to be of a mild type, rarely lasting more than three days; but it is said that in some instances among the Natives it is followed by pneumonia, which occasionally proves fatal. The Himalayan stations have also been attacked, and apparently the epidemic has there assumed a more severe type.

Some interest has been excited in Bombay by a case which has been proceeding in the local police-court for some time past. About two months ago a meeting was held for the purpose of appointing a committee to organize a reception for Prince Albert Victor. Mr. Grattan Geary, president of the municipal corporation and editor of the Bombay Gazette, was one of the candidates proposed for the office of chairman. A gentleman named Symons opposed his election, and charged him with having expressed sympathy with the Fenians. Mr. Grattan Geary denied that he had any sympathy with the party in question, and subsequently brought a criminal charge of defamation against Mr. Symons. The complainant in his evidence again repeated his denial, and stated that his reputation had suffered by the groundless imputation. The case was concluded last week. Mr. Symons said he was satisfied with Mr. Grattan Geary's denial, and withdrew the imputation. The magistrate convicted the defendant, and sentenced him to pay a fine of 300 rupees, or in default to suffer three months' imprisonment.

Owing to a flow of water, work on the Khojak tunnel can only be executed on the south side, but the completion of the boring is daily expected. The railway line has been laid for seven miles on the Afghan side towards Chaman.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 12.

Mr. Scott, officiating superintendent of the Southern Shan States, reports from Kyaington that the Tsawbwa has accepted unreservedly the Sunnud, or patent of appointment, offered him by the British Government, and is willing to abide by the Chief Commissioner's orders in respect of some of the minor States, the administration of which he has usurped since their annexation. Serious disturbances occurred at Kyaington, in the courtyard of the Tsawbwa's house, between some Panthes, who had accompanied Mr. Scott, and the Tsawbwa's people. An unprovoked attack was made on the Panthes, and the Tsawbwa himself fired at and wounded one of them. Mr. Scott insisted on the Tsawbwa immediately paying 500 rupees to the wounded man. Mr. Scott reports that the Tsawbwa's relations with him are now satisfactory.

The people and the public service of Burma have sustained a severe loss by the retirement from the Burma Commission of Mr. La Touche, Commissioner of the Southern Division of Upper Burma. Mr. La Touche, who has gone on furlough, reverts to the North-West Provinces. During his four years' service in Burma Mr. La Touche displayed great administrative ability, and did excellent service in the most difficult and disturbed district and province. When he took charge of the Southern Commissionership the whole country was one seething mass of dacoity and rebellion. Ootama ruled an extensive territory with almost absolute sway, and other dacoit chiefs exercised almost equal power. Our rule scarcely extended beyond the posts we garrisoned. Mr. La Touche has left the division in a comparatively orderly condition.

Mr. La Touche's rule was characterised by merciful consideration for the people and sympathetic interest in their welfare. Now that he has acquired complete mastery of the language and a thorough knowledge of the people his departure is specially to be regretted. The public service in Burma, however, holds out few inducements to senior officers. The responsibilities in Burma are far greater than in India, the cost of living is double what it is in India, and the climate is more deadly. Yet a Commissioner in Burma—which is practically the highest post a civil officer can aspire to—receives less pay than in India.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, APRIL 12.

It has been definitely decided to maintain the post at Haka. The post will be held by 300 of the 2nd Battalion 4th Goorkhas and 30 Madras sappers. The Tonhon column, under Major Blundell, has returned to Bhamo, leaving 100 of the Mogoung military police levy to work the country north of the Shwili river, and 100 Madras infantry at Manlon to hold the country to the south.

CENTRAL ASIA.

VIENNA, APRIL 13.

Some Russian newspapers publish a telegram from Bokhara which, if true, would go to show that Russia has scored another success in Central Asia. It is to the effect that the Ameer of Afghanistan has now officially given leave to Russian caravans to trade, not only in the towns of Afghan Turkestan and the vilayet of Tschir, but also at Herat itself. The Muscovite Press rightly remarks that Russian trade will greatly benefit by this opening of the markets of Afghanistan.

RELIGIOUS AFFRAY IN INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SUNDAY.

Particulars of the religious riot between the Mohammedans and Hindoos at Belgaum have just reached here. The affray occurred towards the end of March, and was of a somewhat serious nature. Over a thousand persons engaged in the affray. Three Mussulmans and one Hindoo were killed, and many others injured.

A MILITARY COLLEGE FOR INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SUNDAY.

The Duke of Connaught Memorial Committee has represented to the Bombay Government the desirability of establishing a military college for the purpose of training Native officers for the Native army.

THE INFLUENZA IN INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SUNDAY.

The influenza has spread throughout India. The troops, especially those of the hill stations, are suffering severely. The epidemic is generally of a mild type, but some deaths are reported.

THE EFFECT OF EXAMPLE.

(Madras Mail.)

The sincere flattery of imitation is not always acceptable. The official pillars of the State in India rush away from the plains to the Hills immediately the hot weather sets in, and they desire to stay there in unrestricted enjoyment of a fine climate and a congenial temperature. To their no little vexation and discomfort the hereditary pillars of Indian States show an increasingly earnest desire to follow their example. Consequently, among Nizams, Maharajahs, Guikwars, Rajahs, and so forth, it is becoming fashionable to go to the Hills in order to bask in the beams of official and other suns. If their Highnesses would do so in a quiet kind of way there might be comparatively little cause for complaint, but local custom prescribes that personages of their rank shall take with them suites of unconscionable dimensions. The result necessarily is, that the best houses are being permanently engaged for distinguished Asiatic visitors, whose presence adds largely to the local European's cost of living. The Governments might, perhaps, like to have the approaches to Simla, Ootacamund, &c., furnished with sign-boards, bearing the legend "Abandon suites, all ye who enter here!" But this is a free country. The Governments might also like to preach solemnly to their Highnesses on the expediency, nay, the absolute duty imposed upon them by their rank, of living in the midst of the poor people in the plains below over whom they are placed in authority. But, then, there is just a chance that their Highnesses might point a moral from the interpretation which Viceroy, Governors, and Councillors place on public duty when their own personal comfort is concerned. What, then, can be done! Their Highnesses are free to come, and to go; to rent, to build and to buy. How can they be told that their room will be preferred to their company at hill stations where house accommodation is scarce, and prices have a steady upward tendency? In Simla, according to the Pioneer, house after house has been acquired as a habitation for this or that Chief. "Cooch Behar has two in the very centre of the station. Dhurbhunga keeps one of the best for the use of himself, though he has not yet been smitten with the longing to summer in the hills. Faridkot has another favourite residence, and intends to live in it this season for the first time. Kapurthala is about to take possession of 'the Crag,' on the road up Jakho, on the summit of which there is another good house occupied by Dholepur. Patiala may be said to be at home at Simla, where he has not only a residence, but is one of the chief lords of the manor. Ulwar is content to live at Mushobra, where Dholepur has also a country house." Our contemporary fears that European residents will "be forced to go further afield simply because some of the best houses have been acquired by the Rajahs mentioned, who have, of course, a perfect right to occupy them if they think fit." Similarly, at Ootacamund, the best houses are being taken up by Chiefs; and as very little building goes on, the houses left for officials are becoming smaller by degrees and beautifully less. The Commander-in-Chief, for one, has been thus driven from one house to another until he now finds himself very inadequately accommodated in a brace of small houses. Would that his Excellency were influenced by this to request the Government to rescind the order about the permanent location of Army Head Quarters at Ootacamund, and to sanction a removal to Bangalore.

ASSAM.

(Statesman.)

Assam, once the "garden of Bengal," is now being partially reclaimed from the wilderness into which it had relapsed from the periodical raids made by the Burmese into that country before it was conquered and brought under British rule. When the Chittagong-Assam Railway is constructed by Sir Theodore Hope's Company, the province will be more completely opened out to external communications, and steady progress and prosperity may in a few years be expected to place it on a level with the most advanced provinces of India. It has great natural resources which up to the present time have only very partially been developed; the scantiness and laziness of its population being the chief causes of the present backwardness of the country. Its mineral wealth includes a large variety of metals, beginning with gold and running the gamut down to coal. For exuberance of vegetation, Assam is, we believe, without parallel in any other part of India, and all the products introduced into the country thrive remarkably well. Yet with all these advantages Assam is unhealthy from the excessive dampness of the atmosphere, a result mainly due to the extensive forests with which it abounds. As the country is gradually cleared, this unhealthiness will doubtless largely disappear, and the railway will be a most useful medium in bringing about this change. The great cry of the province for the last forty years and more has always been for improved communications; but it has fallen upon deaf ears. Only since Assam has come to be administered under a separate Chief Commissionership has any attention whatever been given to the subject. But the resources at the disposal of the local administration do not suffice for the supply of cheap and improved means of communication. The arrangement come to between the Government of India and Sir Theodore Hope in behalf of his Company, and which are likely to be ratified very shortly, will if carried into effect supply this want. The prospects of the proposed line of railway are described as very encouraging. It will not only be supported by the trade of Assam, but will attract a considerable proportion of the present traffic in jute and other produce of Eastern Bengal, which are now borne in country-boats to Chittagong for shipment to Europe. It may be mentioned here that Mr. D. R. Lyall, the Commissioner of Chittagong, is entitled to every credit for the warm and intelligent interest he has shown in a project which must benefit Assam, and all those whose interests are directly or indirectly bound up in the welfare of the province.

WESTERN EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHIEFS.

(Pioneer.)

The policy of imparting a liberal education to the rising generation of Indian Chiefs has one direct result which may, perhaps, be regarded as inevitable. It is to bring them into closer contact with European society, and to create among them the ambition to consort with the highest officials in the land. The days have passed when it was considered advisable to let every minor Prince who had succeeded to the gadi of a State be brought up entirely under zenana influence, only to be freed from this to come under the control of this or that favourite. Even a Chief of the old school now desires that his son should learn something of the ways and customs of his rulers, should speak their language, be able to share in their sports, and generally to meet them socially on a footing of equality. The Nizam and Holkar are both cases in point, while the late Maharaja Scindia was anxious that his heir should be educated, in a measure, according to English ideas. In Baroda, Mysore, Ulwar, Bahawalpur, Cooch Behar, Dholepur, and several of the Punjab States, the present rulers have all received the benefit of a liberal education; while as regards Rajputana nearly every young Chief attends the Ajmere College. The old Pindari foresaw the change which would come over the character of the Chiefs when he pictured the future of his own descendants. Sir Alfred Lyall makes him say:—

"Good boys they are, my grandsons, I know, but they'll never be men Such as I was at twenty-five when the sword was king of the pen."

The steady advance which Western ideas are making in India is nowhere more apparent than in the case of the Feudatory Princes, with whom a few years hence it will be almost a reproach if they have not some acquaintance with the English tongue. We are not prepared to say that this is an unmixed blessing: there are one or two instances in which the modern method of education has been a grievous failure; but on the whole it may be taken that the majority of the Princes on attaining power are all the better for their course of study, and their familiarity with English customs.

TOBACCO EXPERIMENTS.

(Madras Mail.)

The report of Messrs. Spencer and Co. and Messrs. Oakes and Co., of Madras, on the samples of tobacco grown and cured by Mr. Caine, in the Madura District, is not very encouraging. The appearance of the cigars made from the tobacco is much better and finer, and the colour is superior to cigars made from ordinary Dindigul tobacco, but the cigars made entirely from the tobacco do not smoke well, as they burn with a dark ash, and the aroma is faint and slightly acrid, but the cigars made with ordinary Dindigul tobacco with Mr. Caine's tobacco used as wrappers is better, but the outer leaf burns unevenly, with a wide black margin. Mr. Jous, the Superintendent of Messrs. Spencer and Co.'s Cigar Department, who has had great experience in the cultivation and the manufacture of tobacco both in this country and the Dutch Colonies, is of opinion that the tobacco has been topped too late, and that too many leaves were left on the plant. He suggests that the curing system to be adopted should be the Sumatra and not the American, which latter is unsuited to the leaves grown in this country; and if it be given strong fermentation, instead of being simply dried and assorted, it would very probably not only be saleable in the Indian market, but could also be exported to Europe. An analysis made of the samples exhibited a very large proportion of nicotine, the chief fault, we believe, of all Indian tobaccos. It is hoped that better results will be obtained with the tobacco now being experimented upon by Mr. Caine, who, from the experience he has gained as regards the quality of the soil, climatic conditions, &c., is hopeful of success.

ANGLO-INDIAN CELEBRITIES AT HOME.—I.

SIR GEORGE BIRDWOOD AT THE INDIA OFFICE.

(Times of India.)

High in the great building devoted to the interests of India at Whitehall is the sanctum of "the Apostle of Indian Art," the whilom Curator of the Victoria and Albert Museum and Professor of the Grant Medical College. You find your way thither up steep flights of flagged staircases and through labyrinthine passages, whose walls are hidden from view by bookcases in which rest old newspaper files, bound volumes of the Gazette of India, and other bulky tomes in which the official records of India for generations past are enshrined. The chances are that, if you are not thoroughly acquainted with the catacomb-like corridors of the India Office, you will have some difficulty in finding the room you seek. Visitors to this particular portion of the public offices are not very numerous, and the duties of the attendants sit so lightly upon them, that you are as likely as not to find them away from their posts and spend some time in a fruitless quest until you are fortunate enough to fall in with some friendly official who will conduct you to the desired goal. Once there, however, you will entertain no doubt about your having dropped upon the right spot at last. You are evidently in the official retreat of a man who has Indian Art at his fingers' ends, and to whom the troublesome problems of Eastern mythology are mere child's play. Book cases filled with Indian classics and official reports confront you in every direction, the floor is strewn with models of Hindoo ornaments and symbols amongst which a huge lingam is conspicuous, and every nook and corner is occupied with some object which carries your mind at once to the East. Nor does the aspect of the elderly gentleman who offers you a hearty welcome to his retreat serve to dispel the feeling that you have to deal with one who is out of the ordinary run of officials in starch and broadcloth who haunts the shades of Whitehall. There is something almost suggestive of the recluse in the pale thoughtful features set off by a black silk skull cap which beam benevolently on you from the opposite side of the comfortable sofa-lounge to which you have been conducted. The lines on the expansive forehead denote hard unremitting duty, and but for the close-cropped grey moustache which covers the upper lip you might almost fancy that you were in the presence of a dignitary of the Romish Church who had consecrated his days to prayer and meditation. But the feeling is only momentary.

The very first sentences that fall from Sir George Birdwood's lips tell you that he is a man who takes an active interest in the concerns of everyday life, and that so far from being out of the world he is very much of it. His conversation, singularly animated and cheerful, turns at once upon the topics of the day, and his opinions, delivered in a modest and almost depreciatory style, are characterised by a remarkably accurate knowledge of the questions he is discussing. He tells you that he is no politician. His official position prevents him from taking, even if he wished, an active part in the great game of politics which has so much fascination for the average successful English public man; but he feels no desire to seek to gain a reputation of that kind. If the truth must be told he has no great love for the latter-day school of politicians. A Liberal by tradition and conviction, like many other thoughtful men who value the great principles of their political creed, his soul revolts against many of the views put forward as Liberal by the present leaders of the party, and he has taken temporary refuge in the opposite camp, believing that there he finds the nearest possible approach to his ideal. Slight as his association with politics is, however, he has left his mark on the political history of the time. To his initiative was due the institution of the great annual festival of modern conservatism. The story of how he achieved this is not so well-known that it will not bear relation here. Impressed with the tragic fall and subsequent death of the Conservative leader, it occurred to him that a career so remarkable should be kept in the recollection of Englishmen by some such simple expedient as the wearing on the anniversary of his death of the flower he loved so well. He first communicated his idea to the committee of the St. Stephen's Club, of which he is a member, in the form of a suggestion that the Club dining tables should be adorned on the anniversary of Lord Beaconsfield's death with primroses. After considering the proposal for three weeks the committee declined to entertain it. Nothing daunted by this rebuff, Sir George wrote to the Times and publicly proposed the institution of Primrose Day. His letter was noticed and commented upon sympathetically in a few quarters, and with ridicule in the majority of instances; but that year nothing much was done by the general public, although Sir George did his best to give the custom a good start by buying up every primrose he could lay his hands on between Covent Garden and the extreme limit of the Uxbridge-road westwards. The next year the idea was better known, but people still looked askance at it, and the Standard declined to insert an article in its favour written by the late Sir George Yule at Sir George Birdwood's request. However, the future of the idea did not rest with the Standard. Advertisements cunningly inserted in advance in the papers by Sir George Birdwood, announcing that orders for primroses to any extent could be supplied at a certain shop in Covent Garden Market, had the desired effect. Piles of orders came in by post from every quarter, the circumstance got talked about and written about, and in the end Primrose Day was incorporated in the Calendars and as religiously observed by a large section of the people of the country as Christmas Day or Whit-Monday. Sir George Birdwood is naturally not a little proud of his part in the establishment of this extremely popular festival, but he is careful to tell you that he has no concern with its rigorous offshoot, the Primrose League. Though he has often been invited he has never associated himself with that lively organisation. He is of Bismarck's opinion, that petticoats should not interfere in politics, and he views with extreme misgiving the attempt to push woman forward into a sphere for which he considers she is unfitted by nature and training to move.

Primrose Day notwithstanding, it is to India that Sir George Birdwood has given the best energies of his long years of retirement. Indeed, it may be said that, with few exceptions, his life during the last twenty years has been one continuous record of unostentatious labour to bring home to the British public a better knowledge of the great country with whose destinies their interests are indissolubly bound. From his pen have fallen, in never-ending succession, a list of publications dealing, in a bright happy fashion, with a wide range of questions from a description of the frankincense tree—which he re-discovered for the benefit of modern science—to letters to the Times on the Opium Trade, which had the effect of placing the controversy on that subject on an entirely new basis. He has contributed papers to the learned societies on scientific questions, written articles for the Times and for the Reviews on popular subjects, and some years ago, at the earnest request of Sir Charles Dilke, for whom it may be said, parenthetically, he still entertains the highest respect, despite the cloud which has settled over him—he undertook the reviews of Indian books for the Athenæum. But his great literary work is, of course, his "Industrial Arts of India." This production, which has attained to the eminence of an Indian classic, is one of the few books by Anglo-Indian writers which have laid hold of the English imagination and found a wide circle of readers outside the ranks of those who are personally acquainted with or directly interested in India. Its charming style, its wonderful erudition, and its masterly presentation of facts have combined to make it one of the most fascinating books of the day on Art subjects. Yet, curious to relate, it was written under great pressure, and occupied the author from beginning to finish only four weeks. Sir George Birdwood laughingly tells you that it would never have been written at all but for the importunity of Sir Phillip Cunliffe Owen and his paternal tyranny in keeping him at the desk until the task was completed. Highly gratified at the brilliant success that attended its publication he, rashly as he thinks, undertook a scientific standard edition of it, and being allowed his own way he has never yet brought it to completion. Most of his leisure hours are, however, devoted to the work, and in due course we may expect the finished productions, which will doubtless be an enduring monument of patient and intelligent research. For one who has written so much and written so well it is surprising to learn that this kind of pressure from without has always been necessary before any literary work could be produced. Perhaps, Sir George Birdwood under-estimates the force of the "divine afflatus" that is in him as he under-estimates everything connected with himself, but it is easy to understand that he would not write for the mere sake of writing. He entertains a strong, it may be said a passionate, affection for India and things Indian, and those who know how to approach him can extract from him the rich treasures of his well-stored mind. But as for writing in cold blood and without any particular end in view, the thing is all but impossible. He cannot manufacture sentiment at will. It must come straight from his heart, and if it is not there the pen refuses to act.

This love of Sir George Birdwood for India and its people is really a very remarkable trait in his character. Nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since he left Bombay, broken in health by long residence in a tropical climate, and yet his impressions of the country and his keen interest in the welfare of its people are as fresh to-day as if it were but yesterday that he shook the dust of India from his feet. Most men amid absorbing cares and enjoyments of home life would have forgotten their friends of former days and lost their zest for the concerns which had once interested them. Not so Sir George Birdwood. Apart from the testimony of his undiminished interest evidenced by the events of his public career to which reference has already been made, he has shown in a variety of ways how keen is his regard for the friends and associations of his Indian days. No native acquaintances who have even cared to enter into a correspondence with him have written in vain. A warm, cheery greeting has invariably awaited them on their arrival in England if they crossed the kala pani, and his services have ever been at their disposal in adding to their pleasure or their comfort during their stay. To young Indians studying in London he has been a particular friend. They have found in him a second parent, and his advice or assistance have never been invoked without substantial result. Sometimes the diverse claims made upon him have involved a considerable tax upon his leisure. We have, for example, before us, the sheets of an elaborate introduction written for a work issued by a Parsee friend who had enlisted his aid in bringing it before the public. It displays, as all Sir George Birdwood's literary work does, a wonderful range of knowledge, and must have occupied even his ready pen a considerable time. Yet in this as in numerous other cases service was cheerfully rendered for the sake of "Auld lang syne," and his friend was made happy by a unique advertisement for his book. While manifesting this great interest in the personal affairs of his native friends, Sir George Birdwood has taken no very prominent part in their political schemes. Not that he is lukewarm on the subject. He holds very strong opinions as to the advisability of giving more extended powers of self-government to Natives, and is at one with the more moderate views of the Congress. But he feels that the same reason which prevents him from mixing up in home politics precludes him from treading on the even more delicate ground of Indian politics. At the same time he does not conceal his belief as to the urgent necessity of bringing Indian affairs as prominently as possible before the mass of the electors who are the ultimate arbiters of Indian destinies. He is not very sanguine as to the result. Nothing, in fact, has struck him more since his return from the East than the abject ignorance of the populace, not merely on matters of Indian concern, but with regard to home questions, and he has some interesting anecdotes of his experiences in this direction. But he feels, nevertheless, that those who are in a position to speak ought to do so lest some day a mighty calamity is wrought by the rash schemes of some wild visionary who is backed by popular force.

Of Sir George Birdwood's connection with the Exhibitions of recent times we have left ourselves little space to speak. Nor is it necessary to say much under that head, for are not his services to India in this capacity writ large in the official records? Suffice it to mention that he has been the moving spirit of the Indian section of every great Exhibition in Europe, from the Paris Exhibition of 1867 down to the great carnival on the banks of the Seine last year. Other aspects of Sir George Birdwood's many-sided genius, such as his connection with the Society of Arts and kindred organisations, his services to botany and his purely official work at the India Office, must also remain unnoticed. Enough, however, has been said to show that his home life has been singularly active and useful, and that India has found in him a most valuable ally and friend.

NONSENSE ABOUT BUDDHISM.

(Pioneer.)

Mr. Graham Sandberg concludes an article on philosophical Buddhism, from which we quoted some paragraphs the other day, with the remark that among modern admirers and exponents of Buddhism "meanings are given to words and doctrines such as would occur to the Christian trained mind, but they are such as the Buddhist author and Oriental reader would neither conceive nor, uninstructed, understand." Had he read a lecture Sir Edwin Arnold delivered before the Japanese Educational Society at Tokio a few weeks ago, he might have added that a scientific meaning is now being read into Buddhism which has no existence there except in the imagination of the enthusiastic disciple. "I have often said," observed Sir Edwin, "and I shall say again and again, that between Buddhism and modern science there exists a close intellectual bond. When Tyndall tells us of sounds we cannot hear, and Norman Lockyer of colours we cannot see; when Sir William Thomson and Professor Sylvester push mathematical investigation to regions almost beyond the Calculus, and others, still bolder, imagine and try to grapple with, though they cannot actually grasp, a space of four dimensions, what is all this except the Buddhist Maya, a practical recognition of the illusions of the senses? And when Darwin shows us life passing onward and upward through a series of constantly improving forms towards the Better and the Best, each individual starting in new existence with the records of by-gone good and evil stamped deep and ineffaceably from the old ones, what is this again but the Buddhist doctrine of Dharma and of Karma?" This is something very like nonsense. If there is one idea more alien than another from the spirit of modern science, it is that of the illusiveness of sense. Men like Professor Sylvester and Sir William Thomson realise in spirit and in fact the Baconian ideal of servants and interpreters of nature: and for that reason their method is not to get above sense—the hopeless task Buddhism imposes—but to ask sense questions by experiment. What Sir Edwin Arnold would call illusion is to the scientist as real as anything else, though it may be recognised as having less permanence or, in relation to the evolution of the world, moral and intellectual value. It is the function and glory of the poet to discern similitudes, and Sir Edwin Arnold is a poet: but when he sets down his similitudes as historical analogies scientifically demonstrated, he goes beyond his province and places Buddhism in an altogether false and delusive light.

TRANSLATION OF THE MAHABHARATA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

A statement of accounts, published by Mr. Pratapa Roy, C.I.E., the Secretary of the Society for translating the Mahabharata, is now before the public, and, it must be said, presents one or two curious features. The Society, it will be remembered, was founded six or seven years ago with the very praiseworthy object of procuring a really high-class translation of the great Hindoo epic. Of the lakh of rupees necessary for the purpose, the various Governments of India contributed Rs. 22,000, while numerous Chiefs throughout India subscribed in the aggregate nearly Rs. 50,000. Mr. Pratapa Chandra Roy was chosen Secretary to the Society, inasmuch as it was due to his energy, we believe, that the Society came into existence; and for several years the translation of the Mahabharata has been under his direction. As to the success of the work, we cannot speak enthusiastically. It is in no sense a great, though it may be a lengthy and laborious, work. The English is bald to a degree, the spirit of the original has completely vanished in the translation, and if the Mahabharata in its present guise is to bear testimony to the excellence of Sanskrit literature, all that can be said is that it would have been more charitable to the old sages not to have disturbed them in their ancient garb. The accounts now published will perhaps in part explain the poverty of the transaction. Up to the present, fifty-seven fasciculi have been published, the cost of actual transaction being under Rs. 14,000. House rent is put down at Rs. 3,217, and gharry hire at Rs. 1,506; while the cost of agents (including the travelling expenses of Mr. Pratapa Chandra Roy when collecting subscriptions) has come to Rs. 15,512, or Rs. 1,500 more than the cost of the transaction. It is, of course, impossible to say whether or not this large expenditure on the collection of subscriptions was unavoidable. It is, we must remember, spread over a period of more than 72 months, and it is possible that but for strenuous personal efforts on Mr. Pratapa Roy's part, the necessary subscriptions would never have been obtained. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the cost of collecting a considerable portion of the entire sum received up to date (Rs. 73,000) must have been small. The quota of the various Governments amounting to Rs. 22,000 would be remitted without cost to the Society, and so we should imagine would the subscriptions of the Native Chiefs. The thing, however, to be regretted is, not necessarily that the cost of the collection of subscriptions should have been in excess of the amount paid to the translators of the work, but that under the circumstances the translation should have been undertaken at all. If an epic like the Mahabharata was to have been turned into English at a proposed expenditure of, roughly, £10,000, it would have been far wiser to entrust it to some one or two competent men—men who, if they could have been found, were poets as well as philologists and grammarians. As it is, something like a hundred thousand rupees, of which a large percentage was spent in collecting, has been—though we regret to have to say it—almost utterly wasted.

HORSE-BREEDING IN BELUCHISTAN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The sixth annual Horse Show at Sibi has just concluded. From small beginnings it has now developed into one of the largest fairs in India, and has opened up breeding grounds which had hitherto been closed to Government. We will give a few facts to show how promising are the resources in horse flesh and cattle of Beluchistan if they only receive due attention and encouragement from Government. This year the Remount Agent purchased 97 horses, which he described as excellent. Besides this the local cavalry regiments procured as many young horses as they needed—about 40, we believe. An entirely new feature this year was the purchase, for the first time, of siege-train bullocks. No notice had been given to the zemindars that these would be needed, but there was no difficulty in procuring 25 animals of the celebrated Baghhari breed, and quite up to the required standard. It was this breed of bullocks that used to be in such demand for the heavy traffic on the Peshawar-Lahore Trunk Road. The average price paid this year was somewhere about Rs. 90; and when it is considered that the animals are far harder than the Hissar bullocks, and are procured right on the frontier, they will probably be in great request in future. If they are wanted, timely intimation should be given to the district officers. Another striking feature of the show was the number of riding camels that were present. At earlier fairs the only competitors for the camel-race were the animals used by the Agency officials. This year there were numerous entries, all the property of local breeders. Horse-racing, too, seems to be more popular than ever. The concourse of spectators—nearly all Beluchis—was enormous; and one and all seemed to take the deepest interest in the sport. It may be remarked that, with one exception, the first three in every event were the produce of Government stallions. These latter, nineteen in number, are a magnificent lot, and are very popular amongst the breeders. It is no small matter that Government should be able to draw, in the sixth year from the show's commencement, nearly a hundred remounts for Bengal.

BENGAL. (March 25.)

THE rate of exchange at Calcutta at noon on Monday was 1s. 5 1-16d.

MR. M. E. BRADFORD, assistant magistrate, Alipur, has been appointed to officiate temporarily as under-secretary to the Bengal Government in the Finance Department.

BABU RAMCHUNDER CHATTERJI on Saturday made a most successful parachute descent in Calcutta, the first Native who has done this. When about 3,000 feet high the aeronaut let go the parachute, which gracefully opened out, and sailed away to the north, a pretty strong south wind blowing at the time. Babu Chatterji eventually alighted on a housetop in the northern part of Calcutta. The Chinese Amban and suite were present, and took a lively interest in the proceedings.

THE Calcutta Town Hall was crowded on Monday afternoon by representatives of the Native community to consider the operation of the new municipal law. The meeting was attended by the most influential and wealthy residents. Maharaja Sir Norendra Krishna was voted to the chair. The chief points taken up by the various speakers were the great increase in the assessments of house property and the new method of levying the tax on bustee land direct on owners. A resolution was passed in the following terms:—"That this meeting desires to place on record its respectful protest against the provisions of Section 122 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, which introduces a principle of assessment that is foreign to the law of the land, and is opposed to the maxims of English law as interpreted in a recent case in the High Court; and the meeting views with alarm the severe hardships with which the operation of the Act has been attended in practice, leading to a heavy increase in the assessments of dwelling-houses." A second resolution referred to the hardship in connection with the realisation of bustee taxes, and asked for a modification of the Act on this point. A draft memorial to the Bengal Government was adopted, and a strong committee formed to carry out the objects of the meeting.

At the Viceroy's Council on Friday last the Honourable Mr. Scoble moved that the report of the Select Committee on the Guardians and Wards Bills be taken into consideration. The Honourable Mr. Evans said the success of the measure would depend very much on the discretion with which it was worked by District Officers. If worked with discretion he hoped it would prove successful, but it would be open to considerable liability to abuse on different points if that discretion was not exercised. The Honourable Durga Churn Laha stated that the bill as revised by the Select Committee would protect the interests of minors. The Honourable Syed Ameer Hossain congratulated the Law Member on bringing the labours of the past four years to a successful conclusion. The Act was passed; as were also the Printing Press Bill, the Cruelty to Animals Bill, and Railways Bill. The Bill for raising the import duty on spirits from five to six rupees per gallon was introduced and passed through all the stages.

MADRAS. (March 26.)

MR. R. J. H. ARBUTHNOT, President of the Bank of Madras, having resigned his seat on the Board, on his leaving for Europe, the Directors have elected Mr. W. S. Shaw, of Messrs.

Parry and Co., to act as President for the remainder of the current year. Mr. C. E. P. Vans-Agnew has joined the Board of Directors in the place of Mr. Arbuthnot.

SPEAKING as chairman at the Madras Physical Training and Field Games Association's prize distribution last week, the Hon. Mr. J. H. Garstin drew the attention of all educated classes throughout the Presidency to the startling fact disclosed by the result of the recent competition for entrance into the Statutory Civil Service of Madras. Of twenty-two candidates, perhaps the most highly educated young men of the present day, no less than seventeen in the first instance and fourteen finally were rejected as physically disqualified. He added that it was a most startling fact that seventy per cent. of candidates for the great public competitions like that are rejected because they have not sufficiently developed muscle or have too round shoulders or too narrow chests, and are unfit to go through the ordinary vicissitudes of an official career.

News was received at Madras of the death at Trevandrum, on the evening of Saturday last, of Colonel Brodie Ketchen, Commandant, Nair Brigade, from abscess on the liver. His death was regarded locally as a public calamity, and he was universally regretted. He was buried on March 23, with military honours, the chief mourners being Colonel Y. Ketchen, Royal Artillery, brother of the deceased officer, and Surgeon-Major Drake Brockman, who had been summoned from Madras to render medical aid, too late, however, to be of any avail. Colonel Ketchen was Acting Adjutant of the Governor's Body-Guard during Lord Napier's term of office. He was the embodiment of cheery kind-heartedness and genial good-fellowship. Much sympathy is felt for his widow in her sad bereavement.

BOMBAY. (March 28.)

MR. W. FRASER, Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bombay, retires from the 1st proximo. He has been granted a pension of Rs. 700 per month, in addition to a bonus of Rs. 20,000.

THE Lady Reay Medical Scholarship, of the value of Rs. 10 a month and tenable for one year, has been awarded to Miss Mary Maud Conway, of the Cathedral Girls' School.

MR. S. COOKE, M.A., has been appointed to act in the second grade of the Educational Department, vice Mr. Oxenham, acting in the first grade, and Mr. Ramkrishna G. Bhandarkar, C.I.E., in the third grade.

THE fourteenth series of the Wilson philological lectures fall to be delivered in Bombay in the first or cold-weather term of 1890-91, the subject being the Latin and Greek languages and the literature in which they are embodied. The series will consist of not fewer than six lectures.

At the annual general meeting of the Western India Turf Club held on the 19th, the following propositions were carried:—1. That in future no jockeys will be allowed to own race-horses. 2. That the stewards are empowered to correct any clerical error or omission, if such exists, in the wording of the new rules.

A FEW weeks before their departure from India Mr. B. M. Malabari asked their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught if they would give their consent to his sending Rs. 600 to the Lawrence School at Mount Abu, for prizes to be given in their names every year to the girl and boy who distinguished themselves in physical exercises. Their Royal Highnesses responded in very cordial terms, and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught prizes, which were founded before their departure, have been gratefully accepted by the managing committee of the school.

SIR LEPEL AND LADY GRIFFIN were passengers to London by the mail steamer Sutlej. They were met at the Apollo Bunder by Colonel Salmon, Political Agent of Kutch, Mr. Chatarsi Dadajee, manager of the firm of Ganesh Venayekjee, and Mr. Sivnarayan Khedia, moonin of the firm of Goolraj Jugonnath. The last-named Marwaree merchant placed garlands of flowers round the necks of Sir Lepele and Lady Griffin, and presented them with bouquets of flowers, after which they left in a steam-launch for the mail-boat. Among the other passengers were the Hon. R. Steele, Hon. C. H. Moore, Lord E. W. J. Manners, Babu D. N. Chatterjee, and the Bengalee orator, Babu Surendranath Bannerjee.

MANY playgoers in different parts of India will regret to learn of the death in Bombay on Wednesday of Mrs. Norville, the widow of the late Mr. Charles Norville. Mrs. Norville had been for many years connected with the theatrical profession, her first husband having been Mr. Henry Leslie, who built the Opera Comique in London, and died at Aligarh, many years ago, while on a tour through India with the Davenport Brothers. During her second widowhood Mrs. Norville conducted an opera and burlesque company with great success, one of her last productions before retiring from the profession, two years ago, having been the Mikado, which was brought out at the Gaiety Theatre. She always catered well for Indian playgoers, and she was held in high esteem wherever she was known.

A FATAL SHIKARI EXPEDITION.

POONA, MARCH 23.

Surgeon Thompson, 10th Bombay Light Infantry, accompanied by Major Peile, Commandant, 2nd Grenadiers, went on leave from Poona to Bhosawul on a shooting excursion on Thursday in expectation of getting a tiger. They went into the forest, accompanied by an orderly. A tiger made its appearance, and Dr. Thompson shot at and wounded it, but unfortunately fell a victim in the encounter. He was killed on the spot. His body was brought by Major Peile into Bhosawul. The wounded tiger was not allowed to escape. It was killed by Dr. Thompson's orderly.

POONA, MARCH 24.

Further particulars regarding the late shooting accident at Bhosawul have been received here late this evening. It appears that on Saturday morning Dr. Thompson, who was in a very weak and feverish state, was asked by Major Peile to remain behind, but said he was all right. The shooting place selected was Ghorasgaum, not far from Bhosawul, and the ground was covered by thick low scrub intersected with nullahs. Two munchans at some distance from each other were erected, and news was received that a tiger was near at hand. The tiger came first to Major Peile's station, but turned away, and went in the direction of Dr. Thompson, whose orderly fired a shot and wounded the tiger in the abdomen. This infuriated the beast, who rushed towards the Doctor and seized him by the leg. Unfortunately the Doctor's gun fell down at the time, and his helmet fell. The tiger immediately sprang on the helmet and bolted towards the forest. Dr. Thompson's orderly then went to Major Peile's mandap to inform him of the occurrence, but the Doctor was exhausted and died half-an-hour after. Major Peile accompanied by the orderly and a Bheel went in search of the beast, and finding the tiger the orderly killed him on the spot.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, AND PUNJAB.

(March 26.)

THERE is no prospect, says a contemporary, of the Umballa-Kalka line being open to passenger traffic for the journey up to Simla this year. The line, however, is passable for "construction" trains up to within ten miles of Kalka, and the preparatory work of the bridge over the Gaggar river is well advanced.

THE Jammu-Cashmere Railway will have two intermediate stations besides Sealkote cantonment and Tawi, the present terminus. It has been notified that the Jammu-Cashmere Railway stations will issue six-monthly return tickets to stations on the East Indian Railway only.

At the Rawalpindi Horse Fair to be held on the 2nd proximo, the judging committee will be composed as follows:—Lieutenant-Colonel Amyatt-Burney, 3rd Dragoons Guards; Major G. W. Turnbull, R.H.A.; and Major H. R. Heath, 11th Bengal Lancers. Two veterinary surgeons are detailed to attend the committee.

A TERRIBLE accident to Captain Allgood, King's Royal Rifles, on Saturday evening, brought the final tie in the polo tournament for the Connell Challenge Cup to an abrupt conclusion. The competing teams were those representing the Rifles and the 2nd Bengal Cavalry; and throughout the contest the play had been remarkably fast, even, and brilliant, none perhaps being more conspicuous for dash and skill than Captain Allgood. Three rounds had been decided, the fourth and last was in progress, each side had scored four goals, the individual members were doing their utmost, the onlookers were in a fever of excitement as to the issue, and a little over three minutes' play was left, when the deplorable incident occurred. It is impossible to say what actually happened. Certainly no fault can be attributed to anyone; and though there was a collision, it is the general opinion that there was no crossing or fouling. After falling Captain Allgood lay unconscious and bleeding from the mouth. A number of medical men, including Dr. Rudd, Dr. Glyn-Griffith, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Young, and Dr. Murphy, were on the spot in less than a minute, and did everything in their power to aid the injured player, and when a doolie arrived he was carried to hospital, where he died shortly after admission. The base of his skull had been fractured, and it is not improbable that he received internal injuries from one of the fallen ponies. The deceased was a great favourite with all who knew him, and his sudden and tragic end will come as a shock in circles far beyond Allahabad. He twice had narrow escapes of his life—once hurdleracing and once at polo, neither of which forms of sport did he care for, but at which he was good and participated in simply for the honour of his regiment. Of course, the tournament ceases for this year, and Mr. Connell's handsome trophy remains unclaimed.—Pioneer.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE MARQUESS OF DALHOUSIE.*

The series of "Indian Historical Retrospects," now issuing from the Clarendon Press, begins somewhat abruptly with Sir W. Hunter's monograph on Lord Dalhousie. A fresh life of the great Pro-Consul was scarcely called for so immediately after Captain L. J. Trotter's excellent, if too eulogistic, life of that eminent Statesman. In the ordinary fitness of things we might have expected Warren Hastings or Lord Wellesley, or even Lord Bentinck to have taken the lead, especially as the expressed object of the series is to show how the Anglo-Indian Empire was built up out of the ruins of a factory. Captain Trotter has certainly good reasons to complain of this strange mode of backing a friend, though it may be doubted if the circulation of his admirable little volume will be seriously affected by the sudden appearance of a rival under a more ambitious flag. For one thing, Sir W. Hunter's narrative is not consecutive, nor does it possess the verve and vivacity which attested Captain Trotter's enthusiastic worship of his hero. We do not say this in disparagement of Sir W. Hunter's style, for India has not yet produced a more brilliant and graceful writer. It would, indeed, be hard to name in the vast and flowery field of Anglo-Indian literature anything to match the first chapter, which is devoted to Lord Dalhousie as a Man. It is full of genuine pathos, coming direct from the writer's own heart, and therefore directly appealing to the sympathy of his readers. There is no attempt at creating an emotional sensation. The presentment is painted with perfect simplicity and with obvious sincerity. We cannot imagine that any Anglo-Indian, in whose mind the remembrances of those times are still fresh, will read this beautiful chapter without a certain palpitation of the heart and a moistening of the eyes. With the exception of this passage Sir W. Hunter does not appear at his best. His style is, for him, unusually dry and matter-of-fact. We think, too, it was a mistake to appeal to the authority of Lady Connemara. It rarely happens that a daughter can be brought into court as an impartial witness in aught that concerns her father's character. On the contrary Lady Connemara's imprimatur will rather tend to shake the belief of the reader in the author's reliance on his own judgment and researches. Any work proceeding from the pen of Sir W. Hunter can very well stand upon its own merits, and needs no certificates from friends, however well qualified to judge of its merits. The much vexed question of the political doctrine of the Right of Lapse has been fairly and faithfully canvassed by Sir W. Hunter. Henceforth, there should be no ill-natured remarks on Lord Dalhousie's conduct in this respect. It may have been unfortunate for him that so many cases should have occurred within such a brief space of time, treading one upon the heels of the other, and naturally inspiring alarm and solicitude into the minds of the dependent princelings, for the independent States were never molested, and had no cause for apprehension. Lord Dalhousie, however, could only deal with circumstances as they presented themselves, and his decisions were never hurried or arrived at per saltum. He examined every question for himself, and never came to a conclusion until perfectly satisfied that he had completely mastered its premisses. Upon another and more important point Lord Dalhousie has been persistently misrepresented. The annexation of Oudh was, of course, his nominal handiwork, but he merely carried out the stringent instructions he received from the Court of Directors. To the very last he protested against an act, which might be justified and even necessary, but which demanded beforehand a large addition to the European troops in India. Instead of his remonstrances being heard, several European regiments were withdrawn for service in the Crimea and Persia, and an impossible task was left to his successor. For that he was in no degree responsible.

COLONEL T. WALKER, R.A., Superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory at Bombay, has been deputed on duty to Fatehgarh for the purpose of studying the processes observed in the gun-carriage factory.

THE WHEAT AND THE CHAFF.

MR. H. G. KEENE has a thoughtful article on the question of "Home Rule for India" in the current number of the National Review, which will repay perusal, as indeed does any literary work which comes from Mr. Keene's gifted pen. He writes of Indian people and things as one having authority to do so, for he writes from long practical experience of them and with a judicial mind. In the article to which we refer, he endeavours to avoid the falsehood of extremes regarding expressed opinions on the scope and general merits of the Congress movement in India, which he holds have been hitherto judged from two irreconcilable points of view. The Anglo-Indians, he says, forming a sort of "ascendancy," are disposed to scent danger and to give prominence to indiscreet utterances proceeding from the more noisy advocates of the movement:—"In the columns of the Spectator, and in a striking contribution to the Contemporary Review, Mr. Meredith Townsend has attributed the whole thing to the hatred of the 'white race felt by the brown.' On the other hand, the Native supporters of the Congress and their English sympathisers aver that we are to see nothing in the movement beyond the natural application of European principles by a nation entitled to autonomy. Neither of these extreme views, however, is upheld by considerations of an historical order. If we believe that the destiny of races has to follow the laws of evolution, we can only forecast the future by a due examination of the past."

Into that interesting examination we do not propose to follow Mr. Keene, but the conclusion which he himself is forced to come to is that if time has been bringing about changes between the Natives of India and their rulers, tending to show that the various nations of the great Peninsula may have a latent tendency to consolidation, the end is still far off. "Common institutions are, no doubt, establishing themselves. But that is far from being all that is required for the consolidation of twenty or more diverse communities; and Home Rule for India is no nearer to the sphere of practical politics than Home Rule for Europe." Having come to this very sound and legitimate conclusion Mr. Keene would still not allow the Congress petitioner to go away with his demands altogether unsatisfied. He thinks that he is entitled to some consideration and says:—"It is, therefore, from no spirit of trimming or opportunism that moderate but sincere friends of India would urge upon the British Parliament to take whatever is good from the operations of Congress, and to sift the wheat from the chaff."

Now, we do not say that this is not good advice; but like all questions of compromise between two sides, it requires the consent of both parties. Mr. Keene's anxiety not to turn away the Congress delegate who seeks political food with a stone in lieu of bread, or with a serpent instead of a fish, is highly commendable, for it comes of that charity which is supposed to cover a multitude of evils. But what if the suppliant refuses the proffered refreshment, and, like a sturdy beggar, declines to move on unless he gets all he asks for in full? This is the attitude which the Congress representatives are assuming. They and Mr. Keene differ also as to what is "wheat" and what is "chaff." He would give them "wheat" in the shape of reforms in the judicial department in India, and a more complete separation of the executive from the judicial branch of the administration; and he would also admit of a small increase in the representation of Natives in the legislature. All this may be "wheat" politically to Mr. Keene; it is not so looked upon by the gentlemen of the National Congress. To their eyes it much more resembles "chaff." Here is what one of their organs says:—"A concession which confines itself to an increase in the number of members is no concession at all. So long as the principle of election is not conceded so long is reform a sham, a delusion, and a snare."

This is the situation. Congress agitators will not hold with the proverb that half a loaf is better than no bread, and so they will continue to agitate—they openly and defiantly say so. Mr. W. Digby, C.I.E., in the London organ of the Congress, which organ he calls India, is doing his best to fan the agitation here. In the latest issue of his paper he commends to his readers a letter said to be written by a Hindu High Priest, in which occurs the following :—

"The other day, at a respectable public meeting, a promising young Native speaker is reported to have thus addressed himself with regard to the British sway of India. 'The earliest British conquerors of my country were,' said the speaker, 'somewhat like interlopers. Morally, they had no right to come to Hindustan and extend a dominion in the East. Wherever these people (Englishmen) go, they are very soon found to be betrayers of confidence. They enter like needles and come out like big spades. For the sake of honey (lust) and money the English people,' continued the speaker, 'can do anything and everything. . . . They and maintain this extensive Empire by bringing an ineffaceable disgrace upon the very term Christianity. When these men come to India they throw away their Bible into the waters of the Suez Canal, and when they return to England they begin to learn the Bible once more. Such is the conduct of many of our civilian rulers.' In concluding his speech, he said that we ought to be very cautious in mixing freely with Englishmen, and specially the 'benighted members of the Heaven-born Service.' . . . Our rulers are actually looting our country to the extreme. They are fleecing the feeble people of India, and are turning the country into a desert. The chastity of the Indian women has begun to be outraged, and the males have fallen victims to the wanton cruelty of the gora logs and petty planters, &c."

"Such," the writer says, "is the feeling of the entire Native population towards our Christian Government."

And Mr. Digby, an English gentleman—not without Indian experience—endorses these sentiments by publishing them as supporting the demands of the Congress!

This is the real "wheat" of the movement.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE following Indian Army Circular has just been published :—

Under the authority of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State, and with reference to Article 3(c) of the Royal Warrant of 2nd May, 1887, and the Royal Warrant of the 15th November, 1887, and Paragraph 1 (b) of the Staff Corps Regulations published in India Army Circulars, clause 153 of 1887, it is notified that a Lieutenant-Colonel of three years' satisfactory full-pay service will, on being appointed to any of the posts enumerated in Paragraph 4, be promoted to the rank of substantive Colonel in the Army, provided that—

(a) Such appointment shall date subsequent to the 31st December, 1886, and

(b) His commission as Lieut.-Colonel is of a date subsequent to the 31st December, 1886.

No Lieutenant-Colonel, promoted to that rank after the 31st December, 1886, will be entitled to promotion to the rank of Colonel by mere length of service, except the Lieutenant-Colonels of the old local cavalry and infantry who are entitled to promotion to the substantive rank of Colonel after twelve years' service in that of Lieutenant-Colonel. From and after the 1st of January, 1891, with the exception above mentioned, officers whose commissions as Lieutenant-Colonel bear date subsequent to the 31st December, 1886, will be promoted to the substantive rank of Colonel only on being appointed to one of the posts enumerated in paragraph 4 or by supplementary selection which will be made from time to time in order to maintain the number of Colonels of the Indian Service in a due proportion with that of the British Service. The rules regarding supplementary selection will be published hereafter.

The rank of substantive Colonel in the Army does not give the holder of it the rank of Colonel in the Artillery, Engineers, Cavalry, infantry or Staff Corps, nor does it carry with it the pay of Colonel, consequently it does not carry with it a title to subscribe to any of the military funds in that grade.

The appointments referred to in paragraph 2 are as follows :—

Adjutant-General.

Deputy Adjutant-General.

Assistant Adjutant-General at Army Head-Quarters (including Assistant Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery, and Assistant Adjutant-General, Royal Engineers).

Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry, Bengal.

Quartermaster-General.

Deputy Quartermaster-General.

Assistant Quartermaster-General.

Inspector-General of Artillery.

Inspector-General of Cavalry.

Brigadier-General.

Colonel on the Staff.

Colonel on the Staff, Royal Artillery.

Director of Military Education in India.

Director of Army Remount Department in India.

To these will be added hereafter certain appointments peculiar to officers of Royal Engineers.

The following appointments will carry the rank of Colonel when the selected officers possess, on appointment, the necessary service in the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel :—

Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

Director-General.

Deputy Director-General, Inspector-General and Deputy Inspector-General of Ordnance. Officers with less than three years' service as Lieutenant-Colonel appointed to any of these posts may, on completion of the necessary service, be recommended for re-appointment which, if sanctioned, would promote them to the rank of Colonel.

It is sad, says the Madras Mail, to hear that the 10th, the 12th, and the 33rd Regiments of Madras Infantry are on the point of being broken up, the native officers and sepoy being transferred to other battalions, pensioned, or discharged. The 10th was raised at Vellore in 1766, as the 14th Battalion, became the 11th Battalion in 1769, the 10th in 1771, the 1st Battalion of the 10th Regiment in 1796, and the 10th Regiment in 1824. It bears the words "Carnatic," "Mysore," "Amboor," "Assaye," and "Ava," on its colours. It is now stationed at Secunderabad, where it arrived from Pokoko, Upper Burmah, last October. The 12th Regiment was raised at Cuddalore in February, 1767, as the 16th Battalion became the 13th Battalion in 1769, the 12th in 1771, the 2nd Battalion of the 8th Regiment in 1796, and the 12th Regiment in 1824. It bears the words "Carnatic," "Sholinghur," and "Ava" on its colours. It is stationed at Quilon, with detachments at Trichoor and Trivandrum. The 33rd Regiment was raised at Guntoor in 1810, as the 1st Battalion, 17th Regiment, and became the 33rd Regiment in 1824. It bears the word "Cochin" on its colours. It is stationed at Moulmein, with detachments at Port Blair and Shwegyn. The 18th Regiment having been disbanded for insubordination upwards of twenty years ago there are now thirty-two regiments of Madras Native Infantry, so the number of regiments will be reduced to twenty-nine by the disbandments that have been ordered.

ARRIVAL OF H.M.'S TROOPSHIP CROCODILE.

Her Majesty's Troopship Crocodile, Commander R. ## FROM SUEZ.

Lieut. C. C. Turner, 1st Dorset.

SMALL quantities of wheat of the new crop are already arriving in Calcutta from a few stations on the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway. The Englishman hears that the quality is very good, the grain being full, heavy, and of good colour. According to the latest reports of the Agricultural Department the outturn of the present season's harvest will be comparatively poor, but, seeing that the higher estimates of last year's crop were upset by the light weight and shrivelled condition of the grain, we may not unreasonably hope that the yield of the better looking wheat of 1890 will be higher than the official verdict would us to expect.

COLONISATION OF THE MERV OASIS.—Our St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs:—The Czar has just resolved on the colonisation of a part of the Merv Oasis with the Mohammedans from the Ferghana Territory. The construction of the large Sultan Bend Dyke on the Murkhav River and of the principal irrigation canals in the Merv Oasis will be completed by September. Those undertakings and several others, such as the erection of oil mills and cotton-gins, are being paid for from the Czar's private purse. The colonists will receive gifts of American cotton seed of the best quality for planting.

The MILITARY CAREER. A Guide to Young
General Sir W. BELLAIRS, K.C.M.G., C.B.

"A practical handbook, which may help parents to answer the urgent question, what to do with their
boys."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"There is a good deal of useful information combined with much sound advice in Sir W. Bellairs's book. . . .
Parents will find in it how commissions are to be obtained, the examinations necessary to be passed and their scope, the cost of outfit, and the amount of private allowance that is advisable. . . . and detailed statements of all the articles which are necessary for a complete but not extravagant outfit. . . . The author's estimates are perfectly reasonable, and can be safely
followed."—BROAD ARROW.

"Sir William Bellairs has omitted nothing likely to be of service either to the young man himself or to his parents or guardians."—MORNING POST.

Demy 8vo. 2 vols. 10s. 6d.

MODERN TACTICS. By Captain H. R. GALL
(late 5th Fusiliers).

"Captain Gall's book will be of great value to military students going up for examinations. His style is lucid and simple, and the questions which are appended to each section of the subject are very well chosen."—
ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

"The style is clear and simple, and the explanations, helped as they are by numerous plans, will no doubt be easily grasped by those for whom they are written."—
MORNING POST.

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE YOUNG SOLDIER IN INDIA: His Life and Prospects. A Plain Account of a Soldier's Life in India, for would-be Recruits and Young Soldiers. By H. S.

CONTENTS.—Voyage Out—Barrack Life—Life in Camp and Field—Prospects—Climate—Surroundings —Native Customs.

"It is satisfactory to read such a good account of a soldier's life from one who has experienced it under less favourable circumstances than exist at present."—
MORNING POST.

Cabinet Edition. In 6 vols. each 6s. Vol. VI. now ready.
HISTORY OF THE SEPOY WAR. By Sir
J. W. KAYE. And

HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.

By Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. New Edition
(in which the original Third Volume of Sir John Kaye's Work is left out). Revised and Edited by Col. G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.

The sixth volume consists in great part of new matter, narrating the occurrences at some of the principal stations, other than those originally dealt with, during 1857-58. It also contains a new and comprehensive Index.

2 vols. crown 8vo. each 6s.

LIVES OF INDIAN OFFICERS. By Sir
J. W. KAYE. (Originally published in 3 vols.) With Frontispiece. Each volume is complete in itself.

THE DECISIVE BATTLES OF INDIA,
from 1746 to 1849 inclusive. By Colonel G. B.
MALLESON, C.S.I. With a Portrait of the Author,
a Map, and Three Plans.

"This work, which has already been before the public in a less condensed form, is the best text-book upon the subject of the conquest of India that we have perused, and may be safely commended to every student who wishes to acquire a full knowledge of that great historical fact from a writer who, in his own words, 'will tell the whole truth without respect of persons.'"— BROAD ARROW.

One vol. crown 8vo. 6s.

FOUR FAMOUS SOLDIERS: Sir
Charles Napier, Hodson of Hodson's
Horse, Sir William Napier, Sir Herbert
Edwardes. By T. R. E. HOLMES, Author of
"History of the Indian Mutiny."

"The lives of Charles and William Napier are worth careful study. The essay on Sir Charles Napier is published for the first time, and gives a capital picture of the indomitable old soldier."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—
J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Real Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 21, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 4th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 2nd April; and from Calcutta to the 1st April.

LORD AND LADY LANSDOWNE left Calcutta on Sunday, March 30th, on their way to the Dun and Simla.

THE VICEROY wrote a letter to the Duke of Connaught, thanking him for his services in India, and expressing a hope that he would always lend strong support to the Government in matters concerning the security and well-being of India.

H.E. THE VICEROY has telegraphed to General Tregear, congratulating him on the success of the season's operations.

H.E. THE VICEROY laid the foundation-stone of the Vizianagram Laboratory at Calcutta on March 28th.

H.E. THE VICEROY has contributed Rs. 1,000 towards the Simla Fire Relief Fund.

H.E. THE VICEROY distributed prizes to the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles on March 29th.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR was indisposed on Wednesday, March 26th, and unable to attend the various entertainments that Bombay had organised in his honour. His Royal Highness left India by the mail steamer on Friday afternoon. In reply to a farewell address presented to him by the Bombay Corporation, he made a graceful little speech, acknowledging with unaffected sincerity the warmth of the welcome that had greeted him all over India, and declaring that the enjoyment he had gained from his trip was beyond all his expectations.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF arrived at Bareilly on April 2nd, and was to leave for Naini Tal on April 5th.

LORD AND LADY REAY left Bombay for Poona on March 31st. His Excellency laid the foundation-stone of the new Mahomedan Madrasa in Bombay. He spoke in appreciative terms of the effort to promote education amongst the Mahomedan community, and appealed to the Chiefs and Princes of India to aid and encourage the movement.

OWING to threatened scarcity in parts of Kumaon and Garhwal it seems doubtful whether the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces will be able to carry out his proposed tour during this month. The Commissioner of Kumaon has asked the co-operation of several Commissioners of Divisions in discouraging pilgrimages during the present season to the shrines of Badrinath and Kendarnath.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL has arrived in Calcutta from Chota Nagpur. One result of his inquiries into the Kol grievances will be the deputation to that province of an experienced officer of the district with a view to the introduction of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE AMIR, who was to have started for Herat on the 21st ultimo, is now said to be going direct to Kabul. The rumours of disturbances at Kandahar would seem to be groundless, as no news regarding them has reached Quetta.

THE Amban, accompanied by Messrs. Paul, Hart, and Ludlow, left for Darjeeling on Saturday afternoon, March 29th, en route to Lhasa.

MR. W. KING, Assistant Conservator of Forests, Central Provinces, has been badly mauled by a tiger at Betul.

AMONG the Indian Chambers of Commerce consulted as to the working of the Merchandise Marks Act, Bombay stands alone in advocating enforcement of the rules forthwith. This view is not likely to be accepted by the Government.

THE survey of the proposed Grand Chord line has been completed, and the plans and estimates have just been forwarded to Calcutta.

THE Germans at Zanzibar have declared a state of war to exist along the East African Coast line from Rufigi to Rovuma, and martial law has been proclaimed. This news is of importance to Indian traders.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOT, Public Works Minister, is now on a tour of inspection through the Warora Collieries.

THE work of the Chin-Lushai Expedition is nearly finished, the country being thoroughly subdued. General Tregear was expected to reach Haka on April 2nd.

ON the march from Yawlu to Fort White a Chin in ambush fired on the Column, and mortally wounded Major Gordon-Cumming, of the Cheshire Regiment. Major Gordon-Cumming lived for two hours after receiving the wound.

YAWLU post was evacuated on March 23rd, after having been burnt and destroyed by the troops.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR opened the Bombay Industrial Art Exhibition on March 29th.

THE women of Bombay are collecting subscriptions for a bust or statue of Lady Reay.

THE Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company has arranged to take over the Wardha Coal State Railway.

THE members of the Bombay Millowners' Association at a recent general meeting resolved to close their spinning mills for eight days per month, and weaving mills four days, during April, May, and June.

THE Calcutta Trades' Association have protested against the amendment of the Factory Act.

THE Khojak Tunnel is now almost pierced.

THE shopkeepers of Ratnagiri have closed their shops owing to the new octroi regulations, and no rice, ghat, or sea commodities can be obtained by the inhabitants.

THE influenza epidemic still continues to spread throughout India.

Mr. THEODORE BECK, of Aligarh, relates the following incident in illustration of the ignorance of the Indian peasantry on political matters:—I remember putting some young peasants through a political catechism, commencing with the question "Who is Mr. Gladstone?" A bewildered stare was the only answer. This was followed by "Who is the Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governor, the Collector, the Tahsildar?" But still there was no reply. Then I asked "Who are the policemen?" "Oh, there are three policemen," was the immediate reply, "Mahomed Bakhsh, Govind Singh, and Yusuf Khan."

IN Calcutta mercantile circles, the recommendations of the Conference on the Merchandise Marks Act appear to have given general satisfaction. In future piece-goods will not be examined except under the orders of the collector personally. They will be examined to see that they are stamped, but the accuracy of the stamping will only be tested when the collector has reason to suspect false marking. The Englishman understands that yarns will be similarly treated. At the same time it will be good news to Calcutta tradesmen to hear that laces, velvets, silks, and other goods which are liable to injury by stamping are to be removed from the category of stamped merchandise.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 20.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has again addressed the Government on the subject of the Factories Bill. The letter begins by expressing the opinion that should the measure become law it will have disastrous consequences and produce friction, irritation to employers, and injury to the employed. The proposed amendments are next examined in detail. The restrictions regarding children are described as oppressive and unjust. It is pointed out that the children employed in Indian factories are almost invariably the children of mill operatives, and accompany their parents to the mill. The work given them is so light as scarcely to deserve the term of labour. The result of the present system is that they are kept under wholesome discipline and under their parents' surveillance, are protected from the weather, and provided with light employment which enables them to add three or four rupees monthly to the family income. The practical effect of the provision regarding the employment of women and children would, it is added, be to cause men to be substituted to a large extent, thus reducing the incomes of families and working injury under the mask of protection.

It is next argued that the proposals regarding compulsory holidays are unworkable and unnecessary. Factory labour in India is not as in Europe, continuous and constant, not because the mills are not run, but because the habits of the people are utterly dissimilar. Nowhere else is the system of shifts so largely in operation as in India. Nowhere else do the operatives regard factory labour as incidental rather than regular employment. It is rare to find a mill hand in India who does not take leave every year or eighteen months to go to his home in the country, and at best they do not work for the same number of hours daily as would be thought an ordinary day's work elsewhere. The remaining clauses of the Bill are criticised no less severely, and letters of similar effect from the Calcutta Hydraulic Press Association and the Indian Jute Manufacturers' Association are appended. It may be noted that there is in this country a general consensus of opinion against the Bill, while hardly a single voice is raised in its favour.

On Lord Reay's departure from Bombay, at the moment of embarkation, the president of the Municipal Corporation presented a farewell address. His lordship, in replying, said that during his five years' period of office his object had been to carry out strictly the principles of Her Majesty's proclamation, which was the Magna Charta of the humblest labourer no less than of the noblest chief in the land, and that when what he considered a grave departure from those principles was ordered from England, he at once tendered his resignation. This is equivalent to charging the Secretary of State and the Viceroy with having violated the Queen's proclamation by their action in respect of Lord Reay's unconstitutional guarantee to the corrupt Mamludars. The retiring Governor went on to claim the credit of having, with the support of Lord Dufferin and the Duke of Connaught, procured the construction of the fortifications at Bombay, Kurrachee, and Aden, but he added that he had applied himself to strengthen the defences of the Empire in another direction. He came here with a determination to increase the confidence of the people in their rulers, and to have behind the outer bulwark of military defences an inner and stronger line of defences—namely, a people contented and happy.

Whatever may have been done for the first line, the verdict upon his administration must mainly depend on the judgment of impartial critics with regard to the second.

The petition of the Mahomedan Patriotic Association against the introduction of elective principles in the Indian councils now numbers over 18,000 signatures, and the number is increasing daily. Meanwhile the congress agitators are bestirring themselves, and their organs are full of accounts of meetings and of memorials being got up all over the country. But notwithstanding the unremitting efforts of the wirepullers, there can be no doubt that a vast majority of the people are profoundly indifferent to the subject, while all the minority communities, such as Christians, Mahomedans, and Sikhs, as well as the upper classes among the Hindoos, regard with fear and dislike a scheme which would infallibly lead to their political extinction.

The news that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has remitted the duty on silver plate is received with pleasure throughout India as a tardy and important measure, just to this country and certain to give an impetus to the Indian silver industry. The reduction of the rates of postage from England is also welcomed, but there seems to be some difference of opinion whether the reduction of the tea duty will not tell more in favour of China than of India.

The hot dry weather which has been prevailing for some weeks has caused considerable anxiety about the crops throughout northern India. It is already announced that relief operations to a certain extent will have to be organised in the Garhwal and Kumaon districts of the North-Western provinces, and that if no rain falls in April or May the scarcity will become more serious. The Lieutenant-Governor has gone to visit these districts to make personal inquiry as to their condition. The tea planters of Darjeeling were beginning to feel serious alarm, but plentiful rain seems to have fallen in that district during the last week. Several districts in Lower Bengal have also had rain during the last few days, but in the neighbourhood of Calcutta the showers have been very slight. However, there do not appear to be any grounds for apprehension, so far, regarding the lower provinces.

The Bengal opium crop is doing well, and the drug is said to be of good quality; the only complaint made by the department is that the prevalence of influenza is seriously retarding the work of weighing the opium which is being brought in by cultivators.

A strange incident occurred in Bombay on Monday. A monster meeting of Hindoo barbers was held for the purpose of considering the question of the impropriety of shaving the heads of Hindoo widows, and thereby disfiguring them for life. About 400 barbers having assembled, one of them, named Babajee More, read a pamphlet in Marhatti, in which he stated that the barbers of old were happy and contented, but latterly, as though a curse had descended on their heads, trade had fallen off and they had become poor. The curse could only be accounted for by the fact that they were committing a great sin in shaving the heads of poor, innocent widows, thus depriving them of their best ornament. It was against the Hindoo Scriptures to deprive a widow of her hair, and doubtless it was the curse of the widows that had lowered their calling. The meeting thereupon unanimously resolved that no barber should shave a widow's head, and that if he did he should be excommunicated.

Yesterday's Government Gazette contains a notification that British Beloochistan has been divided for purposes of administration into two districts—namely, Pishin and Thalchotiali.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, APRIL 19.

Brigadier-General Symons returned to Haka on the 15th inst. from a reconnaissance to the southward, which lasted ten days, and during which 130 miles were traversed. He experienced no resistance. The Chins were warned that, if no resistance were offered, no harm would be done them, but if a single shot were fired the nearest village would be burnt. At the end of the second day's march 12 out of the 37 men of the Scottish Borderers, with Brigadier-General Symons, were sent back, being unable to keep up with the other troops.

A correspondent of the Rangoon Times at Haka telegraphs that it has been ascertained that the Boino, or Tipi river, is the upper water of the Koladain river, which has its rise 15 miles north-west of Haka.

A large number of Chin villages were discovered during the reconnaissance. In some of these villages the people were extremely primitive; they were unacquainted with the value of money, and refused to receive it in payment for provisions. The villagers declared that they had no wish to trade, as they supplied all their own wants. They gave the troops some capital beer, manufactured from millet, which was much appreciated. The column traversed one mountain 8,400ft. high. Higher peaks, probably exceeding 10,000ft. in height, were seen to the southward.

Colonel Tregear and his staff visited Haka on the 13th, leaving on the 16th. All the troops except the garrison of Haka are being sent down.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 20.

A telegram from Haka announces the completion of the mule road to that point, thus connecting India and Burma. The climate of Haka and the appearance of the surrounding country are most favourably described. Firs, oaks, and rhododendrons abound, and buttercups, violets, and other English wild flowers grow in profusion. Every object of the expedition is now accomplished, and it only remains to withdraw the troops, except small garrisons which will be left to keep order.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 19.

A large fire broke out in the town of Taungdwingyee on the 15th inst. Five hundred houses were burnt, including the Commissariat godown, with a large amount of stores and 25,000 rupees in coin.

A dacoit gang recently attacked a village in Arracan, but were repulsed by the villagers, and two dacoit chiefs were killed. The Government will reward the villagers who thus resisted the dacoits.

It is intended next year to reorganise seven battalions of Burma military police and form them into regular regiments. This will be in addition to the three battalions already so reorganised. When this change has been effected the remainder of the military police will be amalgamated with the civil police.

Major Graves, deputy inspector-general of military police, has retired. He is succeeded by Captain Peile, who has considerable experience of Burma.

SIAM.

RANGOON, APRIL 19.

The work of the Siam Frontier Delimitation Commission has closed, and the Commission has been broken up. Mr. Ney Elias, its distinguished chief, left Rangoon by the last mail for Calcutta. All the territory in dispute with Siam has been mapped and investigated. No settlement, however, has been arrived at, because the Siamese at the last moment refused to meet the Commissioners and arrange a joint settlement. The Government of India will now have to take up the question of a settlement of the frontier with the Siamese Court direct. This is a question of some importance, in view of our future frontiers in the direction of the French possessions.

The Siamese have behaved very obstructively throughout. They were not content with sending their survey parties into the disputed regions, but sent them to interfere in the internal affairs of States ruled by chiefs subordinate to the British. In one instance of this kind the Commissioners happened to catch them and turned them out. Lately, the relations between the Commissioners and the Siamese were rather strained.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

METEOROLOGY.

(Englishman.)

Meteorology is a comparatively new science in India, and the official reports of meteorological observations have hitherto been characterised by an absence of any hints which can be turned to account by amateur weather-prophets. The last annual report of the Department, however, professes to tell in plain words how the signs of the weather may be read, and when the hints have been confirmed by further observations the knowledge will be as pleasant for social conversation as it undoubtedly is valuable for scientific meditation. We learn, then, from a strong and steady monsoon to predict nearly continuous rain in July and August, and the absence of a long break in the rain during August. On the contrary, if the monsoon wind be weak, a more or less prolonged break in the rains during August may be confidently expected. When, from whatever cause, there is no prolonged break in August, it means that a break will occur in September in Northern and Central India. Such a break often closes the south-west monsoon in Upper India; and when this happens, the Bay of Bengal current is usually weak during the months of September and October, and there is general deficiency of rainfall in Northern India during those two months. Hence a strong monsoon throughout July and August is frequently associated with an early withdrawal of the current from Upper and Central India, and with deficient rain during the months of September and October, especially in Bengal and Assam, to the detriment of the rice crops. But it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good; and so this deficiency means a good rainfall in Madras. By bearing these few leading facts in mind, and always allowing for the proverbial uncertainty of the weather, people who like to amuse their friends by telling in advance what sort of monsoon they will have, may do so with diminished chances of discomfiture.

NATIVE CAVALRY.

(Pioneer.)

The experiment of assisting the silladar cavalry by the new system of advances under which the men will be able to obtain their horses, equipment and supplies of grain on better terms, is one that will be watched with much interest. It has been held that the mere raising of the pay of the sowar by a few rupees a month would not effect any permanent good, and that his position can best be improved by helping him in the manner indicated. It is admitted on all hands that in the last twenty years the charges upon the men have steadily increased, and that the chunda funds have been depleted to such an extent that the purchase of a good stamp of horse is in many instances an impossibility. The casting of worn-out horses has had to be carried out on a limited scale in many regiments, with the natural result that there are now in the ranks hundreds of animals that would break down in the earlier stages of a campaign. It is of the highest importance that the Native cavalry should be maintained at the highest pitch of efficiency, and the turn-out of the regiments at Muridki was satisfactory in every way; but British officers know only too well that the strain upon the men's slender purses is a heavy one, and that active service rather increases than diminishes it. Commandants felt that if the silladar system is to be kept alive, help of some kind must be given by Government; but they themselves can do much, negatively at least, in making the interior economy of their regiments satisfactory. Experimental changes in equipment and dress, "fads" in saddlery and swords, and the like, should be as seldom resorted to as possible: the sowar is the person who has to pay the piper in the long run. Smartness is desirable by all means in our cavalry, but everything must not be sacrificed for a spick-and-span appearance. So long as regiments can be turned out, well mounted and serviceably equipped, the men knowing their work and contented with their prospects, there can be no pressing necessity for "improving" them up to the standard of polish aimed at in the British cavalry service.

THE GOORKHAS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Of all the foes with whom we have contended on hill and plain in India none has been more worthy of our steel than the short, thick-set, sturdy Goorkha, who, while opposed to British arms, struggled with marvellous bravery, and when conquered succumbed to the inevitable with a manliness and honesty which succeeding years have converted into a friendship hardly less sincere and firm than his former hostility. The Goorkha is of Thibetan origin, but his pure Tartar blood has mingled with that of Hindu colonists, who helped to found principalities in Nepal under Rajput chiefs. One of these was Goorkha, an insignificant State lying west of the Trisul-Gunga. In 1765 Prithree Narain, the then ruler of this small territory, began to supply his retainers with European firearms, and to drill them after the English fashion. Prithree soon proved a formidable antagonist to the neighbouring princes of Katmandoo, Lalitapatum, and Bhatgaon, in Nepal Proper. He ultimately overpowered them, and the year 1767 saw him master of the whole country, whose inhabitants received the designation of their conquerors. The latter advanced rapidly westward till, twenty-three years later, the fall of Almora made them masters of all the districts east of the Ramgunga. To use an Orientalism, a rock soon appeared in this river of success, the Emperor of China in his capacity of defender of the Buddhist faith, sending seventy thousand men into Nepal to avenge the plundering of the sacred Lama's temples. The Chinese marched up to the very gates of Katmandoo, and its defenders were glad to get rid of their Mongol visitors by paying a tribute to Peking, besides disgorging plunder. Ghurwal, however, still belonged to the beaten Nepalese, and in 1803 the Doon also acknowledged their supremacy. The famous earthquake of that year, vulgarly regarded as announcing the British advent in the Upper Doab, was also considered as heralding the Goorkha conquest, Colonel Burn marching into Saharunpore only a few days before the men of Katmandoo occupied Delhra.

At first the Goorkhas ruled with a rod of iron, and the once fertile Doon seemed likely soon to become a wilderness, the inhabitants emigrating and cultivation disappearing rapidly. An improvement, however, was inaugurated in 1810, which may be ascribed to the determined character of the Goorkha Governors, who, though personally prone to oppression, did not suffer their subordinates to molest the people. A band of marauding Sikhs had the temerity to set the new Government at defiance and, as of old, sacked a village, lifting the cattle and enslaving the women. Two hundred Nepalese followed in pursuit, and every man, woman, and child owning the Sikh name was massacred in cold blood, except a few of the handsomest females, whose beauty purchased them their lives. Slavery flourished throughout the Doon till we rescued its people from the Nepalese thralldom. Defaulters in cases where sentence of fine had been passed invariably expiated their fault in a life-long bondage, together with their families. Parents sold their children, uncles their nephews, and elder brothers their younger sisters. The number of Ghurwalies sold by auction during the brief period of Goorkha supremacy has been estimated at as high a figure as 200,000, the prices ranging from ten to a hundred and fifty rupees a head, while a camel fetched seventy-five and a common horse three hundred.

The Goorkha, as we now know him, is a little man, of great strength and activity. He prefers fighting at close quarters sword in hand, although his national weapon is a heavy curved knife, called a kookree, with which a skilful practitioner will strike off a man's head at one blow. These hardy hillmen, with the Sikhs, form the mainstay of our native army, in which they have numerous privileges won by brave deeds before Delhi, and wherever indomitable pluck was wanted to back a few white faces. Perhaps the best time to study the Goorkha character is during October, when the Dusserah festival is religiously observed, whether in quarters or in the field. Altars are erected, one for the sacred fire and another for the regimental colours, before which pooja is performed. On the last day a general slaughter of goats and buffaloes takes place. In slaughtering the animals the great aim is to divide the head from the trunk at one blow, any really fine stroke eliciting rounds of applause from the spectators. At last a number of goats are turned loose at once, and the men rushing in amongst them cut and slash in all directions, till the ground is strewn with blood and writhing bodies, which are supposed to represent the demons and their chiefs who overran Raja Sooret's dominions, and which are thus completely destroyed. We cannot but regard this blood-thirstiness as a grievous blemish in the Goorkha character; and the history of Kirthepore would seem to show that it arises out of cruelty. When the inhabitants of that place, after baffling its besiegers for several months, surrendered on the faith of a promise that their lives would be spared, the principal men were incontinently killed, and the lower people shockingly mutilated, their severed noses and lips enabling the brutal captor to take a census of the town, the name of which was changed to Nuskertapoor, or "cut-nose town." Still the Goorkha is a manly fellow, and has, unaided, often made a tiger bite the dust with that wretched pea-shooter, commonly called "Brown Bess." He is easily roused to anger, but it soon passes away. As a husband and father he is affectionate and kind, and as a soldier he has proved a very tower of strength to us in time of trouble.

A LIBERAL INTERPRETATION.

(Pioneer.)

In one of the most favoured of our stations—I will not say in what part of India—certain of Her Majesty's officers can, if their means permit, acquire house-property under very favourable circumstances. The boon granted by Government is, roughly speaking, as follows: Officers possessing certain qualifications, a detailed account of which it is here unnecessary to give, are permitted, with the sanction of the authorities, to select sites for houses, and upon such sites being approved of by the Government as suitable for the purpose, are allowed to build themselves houses thereupon, paying for each site a nominal ground-rent of five rupees per annum. Now this is, you will all admit, a most excellent arrangement, and one at which, if carried out according to the intentions of Government, no one can cavil. An officer with a few hundreds of pounds at his disposal is glad to invest them in a manner which will, in all probability, ensure him, in the saving effected by paying no house-rent in a station in which house-rent is notoriously high, a better rate of interest than he can otherwise secure for his uninvested capital. At the expiration of his tour of service in the station he can either retain his property, letting it at a fair rent determined by the proper authorities, or make it over at a fair valuation to some other properly qualified officer. Such, I take it, was the intention of Government when the granting of this boon was sanctioned. Having now in general terms expounded the theory, let us examine the practice, and see how the benevolent intentions of Government are carried out, and how the present method of carrying them out is liable to affect the interests of the body for whose benefit the boon was instituted.

A duly qualified officer, who is, financially speaking, a man of straw, obtains the grant of a site. He then puts himself in communication with various native contractors, and from them selects the one who offers him the most advantageous terms. The usual arrangement is as follows: Let X represent the nominal lessee of the site, Y the contractor. X is to be put to no actual expense beyond the payment of the five rupees per annum. Y builds a house on a plan selected and approved of, or sometimes actually drawn by, X. The house costs, we will say, Rs. 15,000. X, who has three years from the time the house is completed to serve in the station, is allowed to occupy the house during this period at a rent of 4 per cent. on the sum expended, and is permitted during this period to sublet the house for portions of his term of occupancy at any rent he can get. Y finds all repairs, and at the end of X's term of residence the house and ground-lease become absolutely the property of Y. Now, in the station under consideration very high rents are paid for furnished houses for two, three or four months of the year, which constitute what is called the season. A good well-built six or eight-roomed house will fetch from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,500, so that X, who pays only Rs. 50 a month for his house, and say Rs. 30, which is about the outside price, for his furniture, i.e., Rs. 80 in all, can each year live in a hotel, or if a bachelor or grass-widower in the club, for the season, and let his house for a quarter or a third of the year for a sum considerably in excess of, if not double, or more than double, his yearly rent.

The mere fact of an officer making a financial speculation of what is simply intended as a boon conferred upon him as a Government servant is in itself immoral; but that is merely a question which affects such officer's conscience and self-respect. And far be it from me to interfere between any man and his conscience, so long as his obliquity of moral vision does not affect the interests of others. But in this case the interests of others are very seriously affected, the injury to the public being effected as follows: It has now been definitively settled—the established precedent being furnished by a decision on appeal to the High Court, which was given, I believe, some two years ago—that a householder in the cantonment of which I treat can ask any rent he thinks he is likely to get for his house, no matter if the said house be in regimental, staff, or any other lines; consequently Y, the real owner of X's house, the moment the supposititious proprietor has evacuated, sets to work to recoup himself for the loss he has sustained in getting only 4 per cent for his Rs. 15,000, during X's three years' tenancy. The rent is at once raised to Rs. 120, or Rs. 150 per mensem, and the next tenant, who is perhaps unable to find another house near his work to suit him, suffers for the sins of his predecessor.

Now, I beg to state that this is not in any way a fancy sketch. I do not say that all officers who have availed themselves of this boon have interpreted the intentions of Government in the same liberal way; but the fact remains that certain houses, built on sites granted to Government servants, which have recently been vacated, are now the undisputed property of Natives, who are offering them for very high rents, and that certain Government servants are now occupying bungalows built for them under some such arrangement as the one I have mentioned, and that the rent they pay for these houses cannot be regarded as a fair rate of interest, according to the ideas of Native capitalists, for the money expended upon their erection. It is quite certain that the builders of these houses will not in the long run suffer from their liberality to their present tenants, and the question which naturally suggests itself is "Who will?"

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.

In an article on the services of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught in India the Civil and Military Gazette writes:—

Always firm when firmness was really required, his Royal Highness has never forgotten to perform an act of clemency when such could be done without detriment to discipline. This might be instanced in two very notable cases. In the first—Colonel Bulkley's—no doubt his Royal Highness fully concurred in the severity of the sentence meted out to that unfortunate officer, yet the Duke did his utmost to reduce the term of imprisonment, and was instrumental in bringing about the sanction of the Secretary of State to the Children being allowed to remain eligible for the benefits of the family pension fund. Then, again, in the Nasirabad murder case, where a soldier, Private Dumphy, shot his comrade in the barrack-room, his Royal Highness fully approved of the sentence of death passed on the man, and it was duly confirmed by the Viceroy, but through some mismanagement at the Staff office at Mhow, the murderer was informed that he would be hanged on a date some two weeks or so before that mentioned in the death-warrant. Of course, when the death-warrant arrived, the man was informed that his execution had been postponed, which immediately gave rise to a hope in the prisoner's mind that there was some chance of a reprieve. In fact, as far as we can remember now, the whole affair was so bungled by the District authorities, and the general public was so strong in its denunciation of this unfortunately cruel mistake, that his Royal Highness was induced to order a reprieve on his own responsibility. We believe this was not a strictly legal act, but the decision was upheld by the Government of India, and the sentence commuted to penal servitude for life. These are only two instances, but they are types of many acts that the Duke has performed, in which firmness and clemency have been happily blended.

In the exercise of all his social qualities, his Royal Highness has been more than seconded by her Royal Highness the Duchess, who has endeared herself to all classes with whom she has come in contact. It is very possible that the Duke will never set foot, in an official capacity, on Indian shores again, but our interest in his career will none the less continue unimpaired. For neither Natives of India nor the English exiles in India readily forget those who have used them well.

THE FAMINE INSURANCE FARCE.

(Times of India.)

We are sorry to see our present Finance Minister setting up again the fetich of the Famine Insurance Fund. It is too late to expect the people of this country to bow again before this idol, even if it may commend itself to the more ignorant readers of the Financial Statement in England. We remember the union with which Sir John Strachey introduced this Fund, the solemn vows which he and Lord Lytton took in order to make more palatable to the people the hateful and hated tax for which the Famine Insurance Fund was to be a compensation; we remember the ease with which the Government dropped the Insurance Fund when it became irksome to themselves, but kept on the hated tax though irksome to the people; and we see no gain in recalling the past so little creditable to past Governments by raising again the spectre of a Famine Insurance Fund. If Sir David Barbour has fortunately a surplus, if he thinks that the surplus can, in the interests of the country, be invested in railways, by all means let it be thus invested; but how any gain is to be made by calling this investment a revival of the Famine Insurance Fund we confess ourselves unable to see. The Famine Insurance Fund was a fraud on the people of India, and we are sure that they want to hear nothing more about it. Furthermore, it is a misappropriation of terms to give the name of insurance to that which is a mere matter of chance. Imagine an individual going to an insurance company and asking for an insurance on his life, and stipulating that he would pay his premium only when he happened to have money! And yet this is what the Government of India propose to do in reviving an almost forgotten fund in order to dispose of a surplus which chance has thrown into their hands. "When the devil was sick the devil a monk would be; When the devil was well, the devil a monk was he." So the Indian Government when in difficulties explain away—or try to—the solemn pledges given when the Famine Insurance Fund was built up on a detested taxation, and the Famine Fund goes to the wall. Now, when a small crop of opium combined with a high price, the enhanced salt tax—a heavy burden on the poor—and a genuine improvement throughout the country give the Finance Minister a little surplus, he must needs try to expiate the sins of his predecessors by reviving this defunct fund. We say that since the past has proved that Government either cannot or will not make over an annual sum for an Insurance Fund, and as they will no doubt do in the future what they have done in the past, use a surplus in any way they think best at the time, it is absurd to let this farce be played again. The people cannot now be humbugged by it. There is no Famine Insurance Fund; the Government should not pretend that there is one; a chance surplus is no Fund.

VOLUNTEER LIGHT HORSE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Pioneer comments in terms of approval upon a scheme which Colonel Rivett-Carnac, the energetic Volunteer Officer to whom the idea of a Volunteer Reserve is due, has devised for utilising the services of Volunteer Light Horse. Hailing, as he does, from Ghazipore, he has some reason to believe in the value of that branch of the volunteer service, for the Ghazipore Light Horse not long since gained the thanks of the Government of the North-West Provinces, and special mention in the Administration Report, for having kept the peace between Hindu and Mussulman factions eager to fly at each other's throats. Colonel Rivett-Carnac takes a very practical view of the services of mounted volunteers. There are things that they can do, and things that, with the best desire in the world, they cannot do, and these, determined as they mostly are by peculiarities of civilian life and occupation in India, every wise commanding officer will know better than to strive after. It is submitted that from mofussil corps, such as the Gorakhpore and the Ghazipore Light Horse, scattered as they are over wide districts, and in addition prevented by the claims of duty from frequent attendance at headquarters, too much should not be expected, and that to brigade them with regular cavalry at a distance from their districts would be a mistake. So far as this is meant to discourage the idea that parade ground excellences are the only points that mounted volunteers should strive after, it is true enough. When opportunities do occur, however, of brigading a volunteer with regular cavalry, they should be made use of. These, as was shown in the recent drills in Bombay, in which the Light Horse was enabled to drill with the Poona Horse and the Governor's Body-Guard, are appreciated by the men. They tend to smartness and rapidity of movement, and in leading the volunteers to emulate the regulars in all that makes the difference between volunteers and regulars, they give the former an interest in their work, and undoubtedly do good. But this, valuable though it is, should be regarded as of secondary importance. As volunteer cavalry are never likely to appear in masses on any field, the perfection of their movements in masses is rather an ideal to be thought of than an end to be practically attained, and seeing that in individual intelligence a volunteer force can usually be relied on to have an advantage over regulars, it is in that direction that the faculties of a corps should be more especially developed. Whatever a corps of volunteer horsemen may be ignorant of, they ought, one and all, to know the country around their stations better than any regular troops who in time of emergency are likely to serve in their district. If any hunting men are amongst them, there reconnaissance work is so much more certain to be smartly and knowingly done, and to be of so much the more value to the regular force, who above all things would need prompt searching, and thorough information. Of course it is not in the light of nature alone that work of this kind needs to be done. Reconnaissance duty is an art, in the pursuance of which eye and hand and intelligence have to be trained to serve its special requirements. Colonel Rivett-Carnac's scheme has this in view, its immediate object being to encourage amongst the Gorakhpur and Ghazipore Light Horsemen the practice of reconnoitring and reporting upon the country in accordance with the recognised rules of the Intelligence Department.

BENGAL.

THE rate of exchange at Calcutta was 1s. 5 3-32d.

THE Bengal National Chamber of Commerce have memorialised the Bengal Government against the curtailment of the Dogra Poojah Holidays.

LADY LANSDOWNE on the 24th March laid the foundation stone of the new Eye Hospital, which is being built at the expense of Babu Shama Charn Law, who has already provided Rs. 60,000 for the work. The land has been given by the Government, and the Public Works Department will construct the building, which will accommodate fifty-two patients.

The survey of the proposed Grand Chord Line has been completed, and the plans and estimates have just been forwarded to Calcutta. The Engineer staff, who have been in recess at Hazaribagh since the outdoor work was finished, wound up with a fancy dress ball, which was attended by the Lieutenant-Governor on his way back from Chota Nagpur to Calcutta.

EPIDEMIC influenza has broken out in the Seebpore Engineering College, Calcutta, over seventy Native students and most of the servants having been attacked. The college was closed on Friday last for three weeks; the healthy students are permitted to return home, while those attacked will be treated in the college hospital until fit to travel.

THE Calcutta Naval Volunteers were inspected on Saturday evening by General Auchinleck, who dined with the corps afterwards on board the steamer Guide. The corps mustered about 120 strong, under Commander Petley, and went through the inspection, including gun-drill with the 9-prs., the Hotchkiss quick-firer and Nordenfeldts, boat drill, &c., very creditably.

THE Bengal Circle of the Ordnance Department is to be divided into two circles from the 1st April. The Eastern, with head-quarters at Calcutta, will comprise the arsenals at Fort William and Allahabad with the Ishapore, Dum-Dum, Cossipore, Cawnpore, and Fategarh factories. The Western Circle, with head-quarters at Rawalpindi, will include the Ferozepore, Rawalpindi, and Quetta arsenals, an Inspector-General being appointed to take charge of it. There will thus be four Inspectors-General of Ordnance for all India on consolidated salaries of Rs. 2,000 per month.

THE writer of "Echoes of the Week" in the Englishman Saturday Evening Journal thus comments on the Calcutta season:—"To-day the curtain is rung down on the Calcutta season for 1889-90, and, to judge from the heat of the weather during the last fortnight, which, to use a meteorological expression, has been "above the normal," it seems nearly time that we should once more retire into our usual quietude during the hot weather and rains. It must be admitted that the season on the whole has been a very gay and successful one, partly due to the visit of Prince Albert Victor, partly to the many distinguished visitors who have been touring in India during the last six months, but chiefly to the generous hospitality of the Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne at Government House.

THE reports from the railway survey party at work between Calcutta and Chyebassa are of the most hopeful kind, and it would seem that a line from Howrah through Midnapore to the Bengal-Nagpore system could be constructed at a reasonable outlay. This, says the Pioneer, would materially shorten the distance on the direct route from Calcutta to Bombay, and would make the Bengal-Nagpore Company independent altogether of the East Indian Railway, except, perhaps, as regards station accommodation at the Howrah terminus. Midnapore would in this case become the junction for the East Coast Railway, the construction of which is now under the consideration of Government. The gauge of this line, by the way, has not yet been settled, but it is believed that the proposals of the Madras authorities will eventually be accepted by the Secretary of State, and the rails be laid on the broad gauge.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY, a contemporary notes, returned from his tour in Chota Nagpore on Thursday last, having at Ranchi had a conference with the representatives of those most interested in the recent disputes between the Kols and the Zemindars, and it is probable that the result of this conference may be the introduction of a new tenancy law into that hitherto non-regulation province. Sir Steuart did not rest very long after his return, for he took part in the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the Science Association on the very same day. Lady and Miss Bayley are about to pay a visit to England, and will leave Calcutta in the new British India steamer Taroba on the 17th instant. But Sir Steuart Bayley will again set a good example to others in high places by braving out the hot weather in Calcutta until the end of May, and surely what a man like Sir Steuart Bayley, who has been for so many years in India, can venture to do, might also be risked by others who have not undergone anything like the same period of service.

MADRAS.

COLONEL C. J. SMITH, R.E., left Madras by the P. and O. s.s. Bengal on one year's furlough, an immediate change to Europe and perfect rest having been insisted upon by his medical attendants. It is understood that his locum tenens will be Major William Henry Coaker, R.E., once his Senior Deputy, and now Consulting Engineer for Railways in the North.

MANY curious stories, says the Madras Mail, are circulated about the Sati committed at Gya a few weeks ago. The woman who performed the inhuman rite was, after her husband's death, kept locked up in a room, but the story says that it caught fire all of a sudden, and she was soon in flames. The doors were unlocked, and anon she made her way towards the cremation-ground. There was no fire in the room, and it was alleged that it took fire miraculously. The woman entered the funeral pyre of her husband without the least hesitation. She asked for water only once while being burned to death. When both bodies were burnt to ashes, fountains, it is alleged, sprang up by the side of the pyre, and extinguished the flames.

It is proposed to establish at Trichinopoly, as a Central Station, "the Hindu Noble or Rajkumar College," from January, 1891, for the education of Princes, Chiefs, and respectable families in the Madras Presidency. It will consist of four sections; (a) Matriculated Students who read for the First-in-Arts Examination; (b) F.A. Students who read for the Special Test Law Examinations; (c) F.A. Students who read for the B.A. Degree; and (d) B.A. Students who read for the B.L. Degree. This College is intended to educate the future leaders of society in the company of fellow-students of good birth, position, and character, and it is proposed to levy a monthly fee of Rs. 5 to Rs. 10 from each student of Sections (a) and (b), and a fee of Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 from each student of Sections (c) and (d). Two M.A.'s, two B.L.'s, and two B.A.'s will be engaged as Lecturers and Professors under the control of two or more Fellows of the Madras University. The course of study and the financial statement will be subject to approval of a body of patrons.

BOMBAY.

(April 4.)

MR. JUSTICE PARSONS has been granted a month's privilege leave.

MR. F. A. H. ELLIOTT, C.S., C.I.E., has been permitted to return to duty.

MR. J. B. ALCOCK, on being relieved by Mr. J. L. Johnston, is to act as Judge and Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad.

MR. H. T. OMMANEY, Acting Inspector-General of Police, has been allowed privilege leave for three months.

THE HON. A. MCHINCH has been re-appointed Government representative on the Karachi Port Trust.

CAPTAIN CONGREVE-SCHNEIDER has been appointed to act as Assistant Political Agent, Mahi Kantha, during the absence of Captain O'Donnell.

COLONEL JOPP has been appointed Political Resident at Aden, in succession to Brigadier-General Hogg.

MR. F. H. WARDEN, Superintendent of Police, has been permitted to return to duty within the period of his leave.

HIS HIGHNESS THE AGA KHAN has contributed Rs. 500 to the building fund of the Wilson College, and a similar sum to the Mackichan Memorial Fund.

CAPTAIN J. DALLAS, R.E., Assistant Engineer, first grade is appointed to officiate as Executive Engineer of the Special Defence Division, Bombay, with effect from January 1st, 1890.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has been pleased to make the following appointments on his Excellency's personal staff, with effect from the 14th instant:—Major F. T. N. Spratt, Royal Engineers, to be Military Secretary; Captain C. V. B. Kuper, Royal Artillery, to officiate as Aide-de-Camp; Lieut. W. J. Peyton, 3rd (Queen's Own) Light Cavalry, to officiate as Aide-de-Camp and Interpreter; and Risaldar-major Raoji Rao Sanwant, 1st Lancers, to be Native Aide-de-Camp.

THE Deccan Standard says:—With that public spirit for which his family is justly distinguished, Rajah Murli Manohur, following the lead of the late Nawab Munir-ul-Mulk, has promised to give two silver medals annually to St. George's Grammar School—one to the girls for proficiency in English, the other to the boys for proficiency in science. We also learn that the Rajah's liberality has extended to the Nizam College, to which he has offered a gold medal to be competed for on conditions to be settled hereafter.

THE bust of Her Majesty, the Queen-Empress, unveiled by Lady Reay at the Jubilee Technical Institute, was executed by the eminent sculptor, Mr. Geflowski. On either side of the pedestal there are medallions in marble of the Prince and Princess of Wales, which, as well as the bust of the Queen, are very good likenesses. The bust depicts Her Majesty in Royal robes, with decorations, and is a replica of the one erected in the Kensington Town Hall. The pedestal is of Aberdeen granite, and bears the following inscription:—"This bust of Her Imperial Majesty the Queen-Empress Victoria is presented to the Victoria Technical Institute, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, by his Highness the Thakore of Bhownugger, G.C.S.I."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, AND PUNJAB.

(April 2.)

It is rumoured that Government began the inquiries into the Jhunda dacoities on Tuesday. There have been twenty-three dacoits, or supposed dacoits, arrested, and two shot in N.W. Provinces.

MR. SPENCER's promised ascent in a fire balloon at Allahabad on Saturday afternoon failed owing to the balloon catching fire in course of inflation. Mr. Spencer estimates his loss at £150. He, however, promises an ascent in his monster gas balloon and parachute descent next Thursday.

ON hearing of the fire at Simla the Viceroy telegraphed to the Deputy Commissioner on the 24th ult. expressing sympathy with the sufferers, and placing Rs. 1,000 at his disposal in aid of any relief fund. The Deputy Commissioner, while gratefully acknowledging his Excellency's gift, has now intimated that a public meeting was to be held on Tuesday afternoon, at the Simla Town Hall, to organise relief measures. We since hear that the meeting has been postponed.

A FURTHER step in the direction of financial decentralisation has, writes a contemporary, just been taken by the Punjab Government. Hitherto, in appropriating any portion of their surplus balances for expenditure on original works, the District Boards have had to procure the special sanction of the Government; but the Lieutenant-Governor has now decided that this condition may be abrogated, and the Boards allowed to make appropriations up to Rs. 15,000 from their accumulated surpluses. The sole qualification is that the money shall in the main be spent on original works and works for the prevention of famine.

News from Srinagar has it that, owing to the increased amount of work thrown on the Resident in Cashmere, and the repeated demands made by him for help, the Government of India has at last decided to send Colonel Parry Nisbet a political assistant. This, a contemporary believes, will be a permanent arrangement.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These Shares on Saturday were unaltered in price. Mysore Shares were last quoted 6 9-16 to 6 11-16, Nundydroog 2 3-16 to 2 5-16, Indian Consolidated 1s. 6d. to 2s., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 11s. 6d. to 12s., Ooregum Ordinary 2 3-16 to 2 5-16, ditto Preference 2 to 2½, Devala-Moyar 3s. to 3s. 6d., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 7s. to 7s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 11s. to 11s. 6d., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., South-east Mysore 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 1s. to 1s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 15s. 6d. to 16s., New South-east Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 2s. to 2s. 6d.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.

The ordinary general meeting of the proprietors of this bank was held on Tuesday, at the City Terminus Hotel, Mr. William Patterson in the chair.—The report stated that after providing for bad and doubtful debts, the net profits, with the addition of £9,907 brought forward, amounted to £133,768. After deducting the interim dividend paid in October last, and writing off £5,000 from premises account, the balance was £100,768, out of which the directors proposed to pay a dividend for the second half-year at the rate of 9 per cent., making, with the interim dividend, 8 per cent. for the year.—The Chairman, in moving the usual formal resolution for the adoption of the report, said that the statement of their affairs must be regarded as satisfactory and even better than they might have expected considering the continued uncertainty of money. Owing to that cause the business of the past year and of several preceding years also had been anything but smooth. Their staff had worked ably, and, judging from the increased figures, it might be said, most satisfactorily. They, therefore, thought it right, before closing the profit and loss account, to set aside a 10 per cent. bonus to be added to their salaries—(hear, hear). This was the first time they had done anything in that way, and he was glad that the action met with the approval of the meeting. They had also thought it right to add £5,000 to the superannuation fund. After referring to the silver difficulty, and expressing a hope that out of it might arise an international arrangement, he said that that day they had received a telegram from India stating that one of their chief native cashiers had committed large defalcations. They had no information upon the matter beyond a vague telegram, and he could not therefore say anything definite, but, in the uncertainty, the directors had thought it right to place the £50,000, which it was intended to pass to the permanent reserve fund, to a contingent fund to meet any loss which might accrue. There was every reason to hope that that sum would more than meet the case.—Mr. E. Levita seconded the motion, which was adopted with the modification that the £50,000 mentioned should be placed to the contingent instead of to the permanent reserve fund.—The retiring directors and auditors having been re-elected, the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

DELHI AND LONDON BANK.

The shareholders in this company held their half-yearly ordinary general meeting on Tuesday at the Bank Office, 123, Bishopsgate-street Within, Mr. David Henry Small in the chair.—There was a meagre attendance.—The directors' report for the half-year ended 31st December last showed that the net profits realised during that period amounted to £7,623, which, added to the balance of £625 brought from the previous half, gave a total at credit of profit and loss account of £8,248. The directors proposed to deal with that sum in this way—£5,064 to be devoted to the payment of a dividend for the past half-year at the rate of 3 per cent., £2,300 to doubtful debt account, leaving £884 to be carried to the next account.—In proposing the usual resolution for the adoption of the report and accounts, the Chairman said the improvement in the profits generally was not, on the face of it, very striking, but when he told them that during the period under notice the rate of interest ruling in India—and especially Calcutta, where the bulk of their business was done—averaged about 4½ per cent., as against 9 per cent. in the year ending the 30th June last, he had no doubt they would consider the working satisfactory. The volume of business had been considerably greater, and in consequence of this the earnings of the bank, notwithstanding the unusual cheapness of money in the market, showed a fair increase. He was pleased to say that the amount of the deposits had increased by £81,631 during the half-year, and the business done was satisfactory. With regard to the liquidation of the doubtful debt account the majority of these were operative, and it was difficult to say what the ultimate loss on them might be until the various securities had been realised and the accounts finally closed. Many would necessarily take a considerable period to liquidate, while others might be brought to a point at an early date. Taking everything into consideration, however, and making what they believed to be a fair estimate—and he wished it to be understood that it was an estimate only—he did not think he should be far wrong in saying that a sum of about £27,000, more or less, would cover the whole deficiency that they would probably have to face in the realisation of the accounts comprised under the head of doubtful debt account. If, as they had reason to believe, they were able to set aside a fair sum each year, it should not be long before any further provision was necessary. The board had decided to open a branch at Simla, the seat of the Government for some months every year, besides which, since the extension of railways in India, it was becoming a considerable commercial centre. They considered the prospects sufficiently good to warrant their giving it a trial.—Major-General Edward J. Rickards seconded the motion.—In the course of a brief discussion which followed, a shareholder contended that it was prejudicial to the interests of the bank not to possess a managing director or manager. The Chairman, in reply, said it was quite true that they had not yet filled up the vacant post, but that would be done in due course. Meanwhile, they were very well satisfied with this acting manager.—The report was then approved.—The retiring directors and auditors having been duly re-elected, the meeting was brought to a close with votes of thanks to the chairman, directors, acting-manager, and staff.

THE RUBY MINES.

Since we (Rangoon Times) were prevented from sending a representative of this paper with Sir Lepel Griffin's party to the Ruby Mines, in spite of the courteous assurances of Sir Lepel Griffin in Rangoon that he would be delighted to have our correspondent accompany his party, and that he had nothing to conceal from the public, we have interviewed a Shan who formerly worked in these mines and who traded largely in rubies in the King's time. From what we have gathered from him it will be seen that his opinion is somewhat against the ultimate success of the Ruby Mines Company as a speculation, and that there is no way of their stopping smuggling, except by such means as no British Government could adopt. We place before our readers a conversation, or interview, with this man, in the form of question and answer:—

Q. How long have you resided in the Ruby Mines district?

A. Off and on I have been there my whole life, except when I made trips to Mandalay and Rangoon, and for about nine months when I visited the Bangkok sapphire mines.

Q. Do you know that Sir Lepel Griffin connected with the Ruby mines was about paying them a visit last month?

A. We heard that a bogyee (big officer) was coming up.

Q. Can you form any idea why a newspaper correspondent was prevented going with the party after the bogyee's assurance that he would be glad to have him?

A. The officials of the place do not want the truth to appear in newspapers. The machinery sent out from England is scattered all over the district. It is like King Mendoon's iron foundry and cotton mill, one part here and another part four miles off. If these things were reported in newspapers, it is probable that inquiries would be made who is responsible for not erecting the machinery, or at any rate, not keeping the different parts together, instead of in confusion, and some of the people at the Ruby Mines might get into trouble.

Q. Are big rubies found now as they used to be in the king's time?

A. They are found as they used to be. But the bo who first went up (Streeter?) offered such a small price for those stones mined when he was there—about one-fifth of what the king used to give—that the miners became alarmed, and now often conceal valuable stones, selling them privately elsewhere.

Q. Is there no way of putting a stop to this smuggling?

A. Stones are easily concealed if people wish to conceal them, and as long as the value is large and the monopolist refuses to give generous prices for them, when it is known the price in the market is much higher than it was, smuggling will go on.

Q. Do the English officials not assist the Ruby Mine monopolists to prevent smuggling?

A. They do all they can. A man was thought to have secreted a number of stones, and was ordered not to leave the district. He was watched for some days. He did not leave by the ordinary route. But he got away one night by the jungle and was not missed until he had been gone a long time. The English do not punish the wife and family of offenders as they would have been punished in the Burmese time, and people are not now so afraid of smuggling.

Q. You say the price of rubies has advanced very much. Do you know of any instances of such advance?

A. The price of really fine rubies now is from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,500 per carat. I saw Rs. 8,000 refused in Rangoon a few days ago for a ruby of about 7 carats, which the owner said had been about fifteen years in his family, and which his mother bought for Rs. 700.

Q. Have you got any rubies for sale?

A. I have not at present. But I have a parcel in the Mandalay treasury which the Company did not care to purchase at the price I put on them, and they will remain there until I pay 30 per cent. duty on the value, or until the value is obtained at auction.

Q. Do you think the present system of working the Mines will answer? Will it give a profit to the Company paying the Government to work it?

A. I do not think it ever will, unless the Company get the Government to reduce the amount of fee they pay annually, and they must arrange satisfactorily with the miners to prevent smuggling.

Q. How can that be done?

A. I cannot say how honesty can be brought about amongst the miners. But if they are treated well they may become honest. When the first bo (Streeter?) went up they showed him all the stones they got, big and little, but he offered so small a sum that they got disgusted, and now they usually conceal the big rubies, and only show those of less value.

Q. Do you go back to the Mines?

A. I go to Mandalay first by to-night's train, and after staying a week in Mandalay, if I can get my rubies from the Government auction mart, I should probably return to Rangoon before going to the ruby mines.

From what this man has stated it would seem that smuggling is the great difficulty the Ruby Mines Company have to contend against. It is not easy to see how it can be put down. The possession of rubies can hardly be made an offence like the possession of ganga, or opium, over a certain weight, and stones are so easily concealed that smugglers are likely to have the best of the game.

THE Merchandise Marks Act Committee recommended that piece-goods should only be examined by the Collector personally when there is reason to suspect a fraud. If they are stamped, no examination, as a rule, should be made. Delicate goods, such as laces, &c., are not to remain under the provisions regarding stamped merchandise.

AMONG the Indian Chambers of Commerce consulted as to the working of the Merchandise Marks Act, Bombay stands alone in advocating the enforcement of the rules forthwith. This view is certainly not likely to be accepted by the Government.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN, K.C.S.I., Agent to the Governor-General in Beluchistan, arrived at Quetta by mail train on the evening of March 22nd, after having inspected the Government Petroleum Wells at Kattan.

It is clear that the editing of the Gazette of India requires looking into. The issue for last Saturday contains a notification granting one year's furlough to Surgeon-Major G. P. Mackenzie, Senior Medical Officer of Port Blair, who died on board the steamer Peshawar, on his way home, on the 2nd ult.

THERE is balm in Gilead. Irrespective of its immediate objects the Chin-Lushai Expedition, which has proved so costly to the Government and so harassing to the troops, has been attended with some satisfactory results. The first question to be solved was whether it was practicable to pierce the Hill Tracts between Burma and Chittagong from opposite points, and this has been definitely settled by the recent meeting of detachments from the two columns that were advancing towards each other from Burma and Chittagong. What is no less satisfactory is that there is some prospect of finding suitable localities for fortified posts in these inhospitable and malarious regions, the home of the Hill tribes on both sides of our borders. As far as recent researches have gone—and these have necessarily been restricted by the nature of the surrounding country and the wild instincts of the tribes—these Hill Tracts are not without one or more oases to relieve their generally dreary and desolate character. Haka is described by Lieutenant Norris, of the Chin Column, as “a most delightful place.” The camp is situated in a broad, open valley where “wild pear trees are blossoming in profusion, and violets and other English flowers abound.” Such sites as Haka and other places in equally favourable situations where the other indispensable conditions to a settlement are to be found, might well be selected, it seems to us, for occupation by British troops suited to this particular work. These fortified posts could be held as centres whence a more effective control would be maintained over the movements of the Hill tribes. Attempts might systematically be made to reclaim them to civilisation, and measures should be devised for the total repression of those destructive raids which have depopulated the border tracts and reduced them to their primitive condition of forest and jungle. The discovery of Haka should lead to a wider extension of our exploration in search of similar places throughout this hilly region. The objects of the present military expedition will be but partially fulfilled unless the whole country over which the wild tribes are scattered, is brought under our complete control by a line of fortified posts that can intercept raiding parties on their way to the plains. The lessons taught by the operations of the present expedition have doubtless had a chastening effect on these savage tribes and while their present impressions are still fresh, the Government might well take the opportunity to frame and carry out a well-considered policy for the effective protection of our border districts and for the opening out of the Hill country to civilising influences.

THE VOLUNTEER QUESTION.

(Bengalee.)

We cannot see what possible objection there could be to the granting of this reasonable prayer which has been persistently renewed from time to time, and which is repeated every year by the National Congress. What appears to us as remarkable is that our rulers who are so easily able to conciliate the people by concessions hardly worth the name, should neglect these opportunities. The reconstitution of the Councils upon a partially elective basis and the concession of the present demand are really such small things that it seems to us a wonder that there should be so much hesitation and even reluctance on the part of our rulers to grant them. When the history of these events is read a hundred years hence we fear there will be only one opinion about the attitude of those who are entrusted with authority in India. What that opinion will be it is not necessary for us to anticipate; but we may say that this spirit of opposition to popular demand has always been the one prominent trait of bureaucratic Government, for the growing demands of public opinion are necessarily in conflict with the unqualified assertion of bureaucratic power. Be that as it may, we earnestly hope that the prayer of the memorialists may be granted. There is not the smallest objection to the imposition of the necessary safeguards. The number may be limited at first; selected men need only be enrolled, and a body of Indian volunteers raised under such safeguards would be a source of contentment to the people and of strength to the Government. If Africans, West Indians, Jews, the nondescripts of the human race who inhabit the backslums of Calcutta are permitted and are indeed encouraged to become volunteers, is it not indeed a deep slur upon us that we, the children of the soil, the Hindoo and Mahomedan subjects of Her Majesty, should alone be denied the right of taking a part in the defence of our country? We have seen some of these youthful volunteers armed with their guns, and but for their dress, we should have mistaken them for Bengalees. In physique they certainly are not superior to the average Bengalee. We presume our great crime is that we maintain the purity of our blood, and that we are capable of tracing our descent through a long line of ancestors. The slur should be removed. It is unworthy of a great Government, and specially of a Government that professes to rule all classes of its subjects according to the same enlightened laws. We once again beg to express the earnest hope that the prayer which is now made will be granted.

A BURMA paper notes, as a matter for surprise, the fact of a Parsee in those parts turning Christian in order to marry a young lady of the latter faith, with whom the Parsee had fallen violently in love.

WEEKLY memorandum of remittances to the Home Treasury by means of Council Bills:—1. Amount to be remitted during 1889-90, £15,400,900. 2. Remitted from April 1st, 1889, to March 22nd, 1890, £14,929,700. 3. Balance to be remitted from March 23rd to March 31st, 1890, £471,200.

THERE have been an unusually large number of fatal and other serious accidents at polo this season, and a correspondent, says a writer in a weekly Calcutta contemporary, seems to me to have hit the right nail on the head as to the cause thereof. He shows that the game has entirely changed since its first introduction, when the limit of the height of ponies was 12.2 hands, and the game was not played nearly so fast as it is at present. The change has come on gradually, until the height of the ponies now used has been raised to 14 hands, and the pace at which the game is played has also increased in a corresponding degree. As he truly says, it is almost impossible to pull up animals of this size when going full speed, and with the rider intent upon making a stroke or foiling his adversary's stroke, and hence the numerous accidents which have occurred. As a remedy, he suggests that a conference could be held of the Secretaries of the different polo and gymkhana clubs to consider the question as to the reduction of the height of the ponies allowed to play to thirteen hands and under. It must be remembered that the Manipuris, from whom the game was first introduced into this country, always rode ponies of twelve hands or under, and up to a very late period the Behar planters, who may be considered some of the best exponents of the games in this country, limited the height of their ponies to thirteen hands. So the question is at any rate well worth consideration. With such a number of serious accidents occurring it may become a question with the authorities whether they should not interfere to put a stop to the game among officers and others under their control, and so, perhaps, it would be advisable for the players themselves to put their house in order before the necessity arises for official interference.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ROMANOFFS.*

Mr. Sutherland Edwards must be credited with considerable self-reliance in bringing out his interesting history of the Romanoff dynasty so close upon the heels of Professor Morfett's comprehensive and exhaustive work on the Russian Empire as a link in the admirable chain known as "The Stories of the Nations." The volume before us is less pretentious, and is altogether better adapted to the wants and tastes of the general reader. It professes to deal only with the Russia that is familiar to Modern Europe, and accordingly begins with the chequered career of Michael Feodorovitch, the founder of the Romanoff family, and grandfather of Peter the Great. At that time the Turks were a substantial terror to Europe, and Michael's son, Alexis, was well advised in endeavouring to form a league to expel them from Christendom. He failed, however, to overcome the mutual jealousies of the other Continental Powers, and thus the downfall of Turkey was adjourned to a distant future. In those days little was known of the strength and resources of the Tsars of Muscovy, who were still regarded as Tartars in an incipient stage of civilisation, and thus the attempt of Alexis Michaelovitch to place himself at the head of a European League may possibly have been looked upon as an unpardonable act of presumption. It was reserved for his son, Peter the Great, to make the first demonstration against the existence of a Mohammedan Government on the European side of the Straits of Constantinople, though he was probably actuated by ambitions rather than religious motives. Had the Turks, however, been true to themselves, that first movement to the southward on the part of Russia would have ended in the surrender or destruction of the Muscovite army and in the death or capture of the Tzar. The fates decreed otherwise, and the expulsion of the Turks had been bequeathed as an heirloom from Tzar to Tzar down to our own times, with no immediate prospect of the fulfilment of that bequest. Notwithstanding his narrow escape on that occasion Peter the Great succeeded in laying, deep and wide, the foundation of the Russian Empire such as we now behold the mighty fabric built up by so many hands with marvellous continuity of purpose. The gradual, or rather the rapid, rise of the "Divine Figure from the North" had been clearly and forcibly depicted by Mr. Edwards. Even greater commendation must be conceded to his lucid exposure of the diplomatic blundering which brought about the Crimean war. It is now generally recognised by readers of Blue-books that there never was a war less necessary or justifiable. Had Lord Aberdeen been less weak and credulous, had Lord Palmerston been less intent on strengthening the hands of Napoleon III., Turkey might have remained unmolested, nor would any rupture have occurred between England and Russia—a calamity to both countries. More really instructive, perhaps, is the chapter devoted to the illustration of the present internal condition of Russia, the natural consequence of the ill-managed emancipation of the serfs. The general reader may, doubtless, take greater pleasure in mastering the diplomatic correspondence which was fitly terminated by the Crimean war, but all that belongs to what Mr. Gladstone would characterise as ancient history. At the same time, it is more intelligible, and seems to concern us more nearly, even after the lapse of so many years, than the elucidation of the strange, and in themselves often insignificant, details that are preparing the way for a revolution destined eventually to end in a constitutional form of government. Mr. Edwards may have been too minute and detailed in this portion of his most readable volume; but at least he has taken the public into his confidence, and has placed the probable future before them.

STRIKING EVENTS IN IRISH HISTORY.†

Mr. Dowsett, who we learn from his title-page is the author of "Will Englishmen let Atheists make the laws which are to govern them?" "Oath or affirmation?" "Quit you like men," &c., says in his preface that the object of his book is to assist the circulation of facts respecting the past and recent history of Ireland, with a view to promoting a more intelligent opinion upon what is called the "Irish Question." The intelligent opinion which Mr. Dowsett would promote is to believe everything against Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell that the malice of party spirit has said or insinuated. It is not necessary to go further to find out how far Mr. Dowsett can be followed as an independent authority than to read what he has written regarding Pigott and the forged letters.

* "The Romanoffs: Tsars of Moscow and Emperors of Russia." By H. Sutherland Edwards. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

† "Striking Events in Irish History." By C. T. Dowsett. (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co.)

He allows that Pigott confessed to the forgery, but this "was at the private house of Mr. Labouchere" (Mr. Parnell's friend!!!), but "Pigott first swore in open Court, before the judges and counsel, that the letters were not forged." The judgment come to by Mr. Dowsett is that "the public cannot believe that he (Pigott) told ALL a lie in open Court and ALL the truth in a private way." This opinion, emphasised in big type, with capitals and marks of exclamation, will show what kind of a guide to truthful history Mr. Dowsett is.

THE MADRAS DISBANDMENTS.

It is formally notified in the Gazette of India that the regiments "selected for localisation in Burma are the 10th, 12th, and 33rd Regiments of Madras Infantry." This is a neat way of putting it. In plainer English—and why should euphony be studied in a Gazette?—the three regiments named are to be broken up, and by a mere figure of speech they are to be localised in Burma. The notification proceeds to say:—

"The Native Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and men at present serving in these corps will now be disposed of in the manner set forth in paragraph 23 of G.G.O. No. 231 of 1890, and their places therein taken by the Native Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and men of the Kubo Valley Police Battalion, the Chin Levy, and the Shan States Levy, respectively: (a) The present Native Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and men of the 10th Madras Infantry will be replaced by those of the Kubo Valley Police Battalion; (b) those of the 12th Madras Infantry by the Native Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and men of the Chin Levy; and (c) the Native Officers, Non-Commissioned officers and men of the 33rd Madras Infantry by those of the Shan States Levy,—the three corps being brought up to the authorised strength in the manner indicated in paragraph 20 of the G.G.O. The necessary subsidiary orders for carrying out these changes, the appointment of British Officers to the re-organised 10th, 12th, and 33rd Madras Infantry, and the disposal of the officers at present holding appointments in those regiments, will be issued by the Government of Madras and the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army."

It is announced that an examination will be held in London in August, 1890, for twelve appointments as Surgeon in the Indian Medical Service. Applications should be made to the Military Secretary at the India Office, who will hereafter publish the exact date of the examinations.

THE sixth report of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association is of peculiar interest, inasmuch as it is the first to be submitted since the registration of the Association under the Indian Companies' Act. For this reason, too, the Report covers a period of only six months, the last annual meeting having been held on the 20th of June, 1889. The effect of the change is to limit the liability of each member, in the event of the Association being wound up during the time that he is a member, or within a year afterwards, to the sum of one rupee. Also, that the Association is now able to form funds for the furtherance of special objects coming within its province, and to appear formally in any legal proceeding with regard to which it might be desirable that it should act as a corporate body. The Council of the Association is also put into a position to make over its invested funds to a Trust. An appendix to the Report gives the letter which was submitted by the Secretary to the Government of India last July on the subject of factory legislation. The letter is a logically forcible showing of the fact that oppression, as it is understood 11 factories at home, is unknown in India, where factory labourers, from their own point of view and that of other Indian workmen, are very well off. Another important matter which has engaged the attention of the Association is the case of the ever-increasing number of Europeans who find themselves out of employment in India through no fault of their own, and whom it would be an outrage to subject to the Vagrancy Act. The subject is a difficult one, but inquiries are being pushed in different directions, and a satisfactory measure will, doubtless, be suggested in time. Two appeals for legal redress were made to the Council during the half-year; but it was found that they did not call for interference. In cases of appeal or complaint of this nature, the Council wish it to be understood that a short and clear statement of facts which are capable of proof should be addressed to the Secretary, to justify the Council in applying for the records of Court or other documents required for the consideration of the case. Among other matters which occupied the Association the Leper Bill deserves mention. And a sum of Rs 1,000 was collected to erect a memorial over the grave of the late Mr. G. S. Judge, whose services as "Britannicus" during the Ilbert Bill controversy earned the lasting gratitude of the European community.

MONDAY, APRIL 21, 1890.

A "DOWN-TRODDEN" PEOPLE.

MR. SURENDRO NATH BANERJEE has come and has spoken on behalf of the "down-trodden" millions of India; but the sensation which he and his friends expected that his oration would cause has withered away. Mr. Banerjee is not a gentleman born to blush unseen, but, like the flower of which the poet sings, it has been his fate to do so, and to waste all his sweetness on the desert air of Clerkenwell. Whether that district has any particular knowledge of, or sympathy with, India we know not, but on last Monday evening the British Committee of the Indian National Congress convened a meeting at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road, for the purpose of welcoming Mr. Banerjee to England, and of hearing him "orate" about all that the Indian National Congress asks for and won't get. Sir William Wedderburn presided, and letters of regret at their inability to be present, but sympathising with the objects of the gathering, were received from Mr. J. Rowlands, M.P., Mr. B. Lucraft, Mr. J. Kenwick Seager, Secretary of the Liberal and Radical Union, and "other gentlemen." The objects of the gathering were to insist upon the carrying out of the programme of the Congress, which the Liberal and Radical Daily News allows to be of "a somewhat extensive character"—a fact which nobody will deny after reading the details of the programme, as given in that journal. The programme, it states, comprises "Reform of the Supreme Presidency and Provincial Councils; fair play in the public service; Indians to be put on an equal footing with Britons; the extension of trial by jury and criminal procedure on the basis prevailing in Britain; improved police administration; the establishment of military colleges to provide education and training for Indians as officers of the Indian army; a system of volunteering for all Indians and not for Indian Christians only; improvements in the Arms Act to enable cultivators and others to protect themselves against wild beasts; reform of the drink regulations; a more equitable imposition of the income-tax; the fostering of technical and other education by Government; land laws and revenue reform; a reduction of the salt tax; economy in administration and reduction of military expenditure; and, lastly, "the mending or ending of the Secretary of State's Council." This is the modest programme which was put before what the chairman called "a meeting of sympathetic Englishmen, who by their presence showed themselves desirous of doing justice to their Indian fellow-subjects." Sir William Wedderburn pointed out one way in which that much-desired justice could be done. He hoped that the electors present would at the next election prove their devotion to the cause of justice to India by returning Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji as their representative in Parliament. That gentleman was, of course, present on the platform, and was good enough to say that the Indian community "as a whole" was thoroughly loyal to British rule, and that "to the educated Native classes its subversion would be absolutely abhorrent." This announcement was received with cheers; but the speaker did not inform his sympathising English friends that the subversion of British rule in India would mean the utter effacement of the class to which he belonged, and to the "first-class classical" Bengali Babú altogether. Mr. Surendro Nath Banerjee "pleaded in earnest terms for an extension of social and political privileges to an enormous number of Native British subjects in India from which they were at present debarred," but he did not explain to the meeting why he and his fellow-countrymen should be in this "down-trodden" condition. It may be remarked that Mr. Surendro Nath Banerjee's mission to England has avowedly for its object "to redress the wrongs of a down-trodden people." This is how it was described at a banquet given to that gentleman in Calcutta on the eve of his departure for Clerkenwell. The overland mail to-day, which brings an account of that banquet, brings also an admirable article from the Pioneer on this very subject. Our Indian contemporary accepts, without reserve, the statement that the Bengalis are a "downtrodden" people, but explains the reason: "They have been so for ages, and are so now, not by reason of the British Government, but in spite of its most earnest efforts to raise them to independence. But, who are their oppressors? The answer can only be, Their own countrymen. In our Courts they are the native amlah; in the police, the darogah and his myrmidons; in indigo factories the most active extortioners are the Native servants of the planters. In every department of the State the difficulty felt by the Government in doing justice and dealing fairly by this people is their own want of strength to throw off the chains of custom by which they are fettered, and to resist their hereditary oppressors. The power of the Government has secured external peace and order. The Mahratta and Pindaree can no longer raid through the country and levy chouth or cut off noses, burn villages, or indulge in similar pleasantries. The people are safe against foreign invasion. But the iron of servility has entered deeply into their souls, and with themselves lies the blow which can set them free from domestic slavery, social degradation, and priestly oppression. But the liberty and independence which they really need are not to be obtained by deputations to England and opportunities given to Bengali orators to stump the country round. The Liberals and Radicals will soon tire of windy declamation, and as the novelty wears off each of these political missionaries will attract less attention than the last."

This may not be the most delicate way of putting the matter forward; but it is a candid and truthful way. And we commend it to the sympathising friends of the Babú in Clerkenwell or elsewhere.

THE influenza epidemic is raging at Shillong among the troops. There are one hundred cases in hospital, and hardly any troops are available for a parade.

INDIAN INDUSTRIES.—Knives and scissors made by a Bengali cutler of Burdwan are said to be finding purchasers in numbers that may at a near future have a perceptible effect on the import of British cutlery into Bengal. The Burdwan cutlers have, we are informed, found a willing patron in the Bengal Government. A novel establishment has been opened in Calcutta. Some persons hitherto pursuing the trade of match-makers, of whom native Calcutta supports a pretty large number, have formed themselves into a company, and opened a business house under a name which being translated into English, reads "The Hindu Match-making Office." It is finding business enough to keep itself alive.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—"Now that H. E. Sir Asman Jah has visited Aurangabad, it is time that his attention and that of the public be drawn to the immense traffic that runs on carts from Jalna to Aurangabad, and thence to Nandgaon and Ahmednugger. It is incessant; night and day are cotton and grain carts passing in gangs of 25 or 30 with hardly 100 yards between the gangs, quite sufficient to keep a broad-gauge railway in full work, should it be constructed between those places, thereby relieving the very large number of bullocks employed in carting for the cultivating of the country, which could be made into a succession of gardens by bunding up the different streams that run from the hills and now go to waste."

CONSUMPTION OF TAXED SALT IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Sir David Barbour, the Finance Minister for India, has calculated the consumption of salt by the people of India at 31,810,000 maunds, or say ten pounds for every soul.

Is this sufficient for health in a climate like that of India? Salt is required for the cattle.

In Bengal the consumption has fallen off owing to various circumstances.

1st. Government has increased the tax on salt.

2nd. Government has increased the rates of carriage of salt on its own railway, the East Indian.

3rd. English speculators have tried to form a monopoly of Cheshire salt.

All things appear to conspire to make the Bengal labourers unhealthy owing to their inability to buy enough salt.

The Bengal labourers, objecting to pay extra out of their poor wages, eat cheap stuff which the shopkeepers call salt, but which is a vile mixture which English cooks would reject.

Sir David Barbour has not alluded to the increased illicit manufacture of salt.

In Burma our ignorance of the habits of the people is conspicuous. We suddenly raise the tax from 3 to 16; and not only was the eating of salt checked, but the preparation of the favourite dish of the Burmans, salt fish, was rendered impossible for the poor; the rich manage to get salt fish from Penang, Singapore, and other Settlements in the Straits.

If Parliament does its duty, it will require returns of the prices of pure salt in every district of Bengal, and a full report of the incidence of salt taxation throughout our new Province of Upper Burma.

I beg to invite your attention to the Supplement to the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 26th ultimo.

Your obedient servant,

April 14th.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A NUMBER of maxim guns for use by British regiments will probably reach India during the current year.

THE Home authorities are said to regard favourably the proposal to apply the new musketry course which has been so successful in the Native Army to the British troops in this country.

GENERALS TREGEAR AND SYMONS will furnish full reports regarding the alleged deficiency of medical stores with their troops, and the issue of tinned provisions and stores said to be unfit for consumption.

In a recent Madras Government Gazette appears a strange notification, to the effect that a deserted private's war medal is lying unclaimed, and that the claimant should submit an application through the usual channel, &c. This certainly sounds very much like a joke.

GENERAL GORDON's tenure of the Burma command will extend to the 1st June next, as it is desired that he shall remain till the taking over of the Police Levies, and the garrisoning and supplying of the posts in the Chin Hills have been completed.

No direct appeal will be made to the Army in India on behalf of the proposed Napier Memorial. At the same time, while there is to be no pressure, it is expected that many admirers of Lord Napier in India will subscribe to the present fund.

THE Patiala Infantry are, we learn from the Civil and Military Gazette, well on their way to equal the excellence which has been attained by the Patiala Lancers. They are a very fine regiment, and the way they are learning their work is said to be really surprising.

THE Bombay Gazette learns that the Viceroy has written a letter to the Duke of Connaught thanking him for his services in India, and expressing a hope he will always lend his strong support to the Government in matters concerning the security and well-being of India.

It has been recently ruled, after much discussion, that an Indian Volunteer officer is eligible to enter for any of the examinations in foreign languages that are held for officers of the army. The case was raised by a Volunteer officer of the East Indian Railway Corps who wished to submit himself for examination in Russian.

THE Calcutta Naval Volunteers were inspected on Saturday evening, March 29, by General Auchinleck, who dined with the corps afterwards on the steamer Guida. The corps mustered about 120 strong under Commander Petley, and went through the inspection, including gun-drill with the 9-pounders, the Hotchkiss quick-firer and Nordenfeldts, boat-drill, &c., very creditably.

WITH regard to the disbandment of the 10th, 12th and 33rd Madras Infantry, the 10th break up at Secunderabad on the arrival there of the 15th from Burma, the 12th will be immediately relieved by the 17th, and then disbanded at Madras, and the 33rd breaks up at Madras on arrival from Burma. These disbandments entail no reduction in the military strength, as the same number of fresh local regiments are being raised in Burma.

No. 7 Bengal Mounted Battery, one of the two batteries raised in the first instance for service in Upper Burma, is to be stationed at Dera Ismail Khan temporarily on arrival in India a few weeks hence. The battery will occupy the old British lines which are now vacant. It might be well if a mounted battery were stationed permanently at Dera Ismail now that the Gomal route is being opened, as its services would be at once available in case of disturbances beyond the Suleiman Range.

MAJOR DANIELL, Commandant of the Governor's Bodyguard, has read the Bombay Light Horse a homily on the duties of a cavalryman. He said horse and man partly trained were of little use. More attention should be given to drill, for the tendency of members was to begin at the top instead of the bottom. They wanted thorough acquaintance with scouting duties, and a certain number should be trained as signallers. Finally, he rated those half-hearted members to be found in every Volunteer corps who discredited their fellows by their inefficiency.

THE Bengal Circle of the Ordnance Department is to be divided into two circles from the 1st April. The Eastern, with headquarters at Calcutta, will comprise the arsenals at Fort William and Allahabad with the Ishapore, Dum-Dum, Cossipore, Cawnpore, and Fategarh factories. The Western Circle, with headquarters at Rawalpindi, will include the Ferozepore, Rawalpindi, and Quetta arsenals, an Inspector-General being appointed to take charge of it. There will thus be four Inspectors-General of Ordnance for all India on consolidated salaries of Rs. 2,000 per month.

ORDERS have just been issued regarding the scale of rank for civil officers employed with the army in the field. Chief and Superintending Engineers, Chief Superintendents of the Postal Department, and 1st grade Superintendents of the Telegraph Department will rank as lieutenant-colonels; officers of lower grades ranking as majors, captains, and lieutenants. Such rank will not give any disciplinary power over soldiers, but will carry with it such privileges as wound pensions, family pensions in case of death, grant of medals, and compensation for loss of baggage. Khaki uniform will be worn by these military civilians with badges of rank on shoulder and brass letters to denote the department to which they belong.

THE following regarding the inclusion of Bengalis in Volunteer corps appears in the Indian Daily News.—"Should the Government incur expenditure from public funds on a scale of this kind, merely to gratify an idle sentiment and enable Surendronath Babu's students to indulge their fancy 'for playing at soldiers?' We take it that the Government, as custodian of the public purse, is bound to satisfy itself, before sanctioning such an outlay, that there will be some tangible result in the shape of a body of trained men who could be relied on to yield the State good service in the event of their services being needed. Volunteers could be of no possible use who are not both of good physique and with something of the fighting instinct. Will the average Bengali, who has earned for himself the distinctive term 'timid,' ever make a reliable and useful soldier? The answer is at least doubtful, and the Government is in no position to waste money upon doubtful experiments. To preserve order and provide for the defence of the country against foreign aggression are the objects aimed at in maintaining both regular troops and Volunteers. Neither object is likely to be served by equipping and training bodies of men who would never command confidence in their leaders, nor respect in a mob or the troops of an enemy."

THE VICEROY ON VOLUNTEERING.

At the annual Prize Distribution of the Calcutta Presidency Volunteers on March 29, the Viceroy, after inspecting the Battalion, delivered the following address:—

Colonel Chatterton, Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Men of the Calcutta Presidency Volunteers.—It gives me much pleasure, after the lapse of a year, to be once more called upon to inspect the Battalion, and it is my agreeable duty to congratulate you upon the appearance and bearing of the different corps of which it is composed, and which I have had several opportunities of seeing during the past winter.

The last twelve months have, I am happy to say, been in every way creditable to the Battalion. I have, in the first place, to refer to the important point of musketry. The first duty of a volunteer is to make himself a master of the weapon placed in his hands. I hope those who are listening to me made it their business to read the admirable address delivered in my presence by the Commander-in-Chief at Simla last year on the occasion of the annual rifle competition held at that place. It is, as his Excellency then pointed out, no use to place weapons of precision with every modern improvement in the hands of our soldiers unless they will use them properly, not only by learning to shoot straight in matches and competitions, but by acquiring that discipline and steadiness, without which no amount of practice at the butts will make a good soldier. The progress which has recently been made by the Indian army in this respect has been most remarkable, and I trust that volunteers will keep pace with their brother soldiers of the regular forces. In your case, I am afraid, shooting has been somewhat interfered with owing to the fact that the range has recently been closed for some time. I am glad to hear that it will shortly be again available for use. In spite, however, of this drawback, it is satisfactory to me to hear that some excellent shooting has been made by the Battalion. In the annual meeting Sergeant-Major Hawood won the Viceroy's Prize with a very fine score, beating by several points that made at Wimbledon for the Queen's Prize competed for under the same conditions.

In the volley-firing competition a good score was made by the winning team, F Company, showing an improvement upon the winning score of last year. I am also glad to hear that the medal given by the Government for the best shot in the Bengal Presidency was won by Lieutenant Spooner. Some excellent scoring was also made in the local matches of the Presidency Rifle Association. Amongst these, Volunteer Spiers was successful, making "a highest possible" at 900 yards.

Turning to the different corps included in the Battalion, I must, in the first place, express my deep regret that the Calcutta Light Horse, by the death of Captain Thomas, have lost a most efficient and popular Commanding Officer. In spite of this severe blow, the corps has worked hard and has held a successful Camp of Exercise. It is satisfactory to think that Captain Thomas has been replaced by the Hon. Sir Alexander Wilson, a gallant officer, who is equally at home in the Viceroy's Council, in the Chamber of Commerce, and in the Camp of Exercise.

The Cossipore Volunteer Artillery has, I am glad to hear, steadily increased in numbers and efficiency, the two batteries being now complete. It is to be regretted that they have lost Lieutenant-Colonel Wace's services as Commandant. I have no doubt that he will be worthily replaced by Major Stewart, who succeeds him.

I have heard with satisfaction that the Eastern Bengal State Railway Corps is about to be increased by a company from the north side of the river. This arrangement will bring the whole of the employes of the line into one corps of four companies.

It was my agreeable duty last year to congratulate the Cadet corps upon the fact that it had increased in strength by 200 during the previous twelve months. I hear that the cadets have worked hard, and have made great progress in shooting. I trust that they will persevere and show a further improvement next year.

I take this opportunity of expressing my pleasure at finding that the headquarters of the battalion, of which I laid the foundation-stone last year, are approaching completion. The building, which I hope to visit this afternoon, is apparently a commodious and suitable one. I venture to think that you are extremely fortunate in having obtained so good a site, and I doubt extremely whether a similar concession is likely to be made to any other applicants in future years.

Passing from these details, I think we may say that during the past year the Volunteers as a force have certainly gained ground and acquired a more definite and important place in the defensive system of the Empire. This has certainly been the case with regard to the Volunteer force in Great Britain. Every Volunteer in that force has now a place assigned to him, and, on an emergency occurring, will not need to inquire what he has to do, or where he has to go. In Calcutta you were called upon last month to take your turn at garrison duty in Fort William, while the regular troops were engaged in opposing the movements of an imaginary enemy upon the coast, and you received the thanks of the General Officer Commanding for the manner in which this duty was performed. Rehearsals of this kind will help you to understand what you have a right to expect, and what will be expected of you should an emergency ever arise in this country. I trust that both officers and men will realise the weight of the responsibility which belongs to them, and will endeavour, by their increased efficiency, to add every year to the military strength of the Indian Empire.

A BAD OUTLOOK FOR INDIA.—China seems at length to be awakening from her peculiar apathy and conservatism in more directions than that of railways. She is now threatening the millowners of Bombay and Bengal, and has taken into serious consideration a memorial to the throne which has been prepared by Chang Chih-Tung, the acting governor, advocating the establishment in Canton of cotton mills under Government supervision and the purchase of machinery for reeling yarn and weaving cloth "with a view to the improvement of trade and the prevention of the outflow of money." If the experiment prove successful, Government mills will also be erected at other parts of the Empire. If it does prove a success, the outlook for this country is not a cheerful one.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. DR. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla: Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but a transient one. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine, which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, AND INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 11th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 9th April; and from Calcutta to the 8th April.

THE Viceregal party have commenced their tour in the Dun. On Saturday, April 5th, a beat for tiger took place a few miles from Dehra, but without any being found. The Viceroy then left Dehra for a few days' fishing in the Dun, and afterwards started for Mussoorie and Chakrata.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, having finished his inspection of the Bareilly garrison, has gone to Naini Tal. Lady Roberts has had a mild attack of influenza.

THE new Biluchistan Regulations were to come into force on the 19th inst.

THE HON. MR. F. B. PEACOCK, who shortly vacates his seat on the Bengal Board of Revenue preparatory to retirement from the service, was to be entertained at a farewell dinner in the Calcutta Town Hall on April 17th.

THE post of British Resident at Travancore and Cochin will shortly fall vacant on the retirement of Mr. J. C. Hannington, of the Madras Civil Service, who has held the appointment during the last eight years. Mr. H. B. Grigg, Director of Public Instruction, Madras, will fill the vacancy.

THE death from blood-poisoning, on April 4th, is announced of Colonel Lawrie, commanding the Royal Artillery at Mian Mir.

CAPTAIN PAKENHAM, A.D.C. to the Viceroy, is rather seriously indisposed at Simla. Captain Brasier-Creagh, A.D.C., who was about to proceed home on leave, has been obliged to postpone his departure in consequence.

THE Mahomedans of Upper India intend to present a memorial to the House of Commons, when a sufficient number of signatures have been obtained. It embodies a strong protest against the introduction of the principle of election into the constitution of the Indian Councils. A similar memorial is also being sent from Bengal, signed by the leading Mahomedans of that province.

THE withdrawal of the troops engaged in the Chin-Lushai operations is steadily proceeding. The whole of the Northern Column, detached from General Tregear's force to act against Lienpunga and his allies, have passed Changsil on their way to Cachar, the Frontier Police remaining to garrison the Than-ruma stockade, or Fort Aijal, as it is henceforth to be called.

THE Divisional Judge of Lahore has rejected the appeal of the Native journalist recently convicted of libelling the Raja of Faridkot. He has, at the same time, refused the application made on behalf of the Raja that the case should be sent up to the Chief Court with a view to the enhancement of the punishment. The original sentence of a fine of Rs. 1,000 therefore stands good.

THE Khojak is now almost pierced, but the engineers have found the last 300 feet the most difficult part of the whole job. The English miners, who have such previous experience as the Severn tunnel works, declare that they never knew ground so bad. However, the few feet left cannot resist long; but the work is by no means ended when the perforation is achieved. The widening out and arching, above and below, for the tunnel is built up throughout with a complete barrel section, is the most laborious part of the undertaking.

THE selections from the records of the Indian Foreign Office dealing with the Hastings' period, will be published this month. Professor Forrest has embodied them in three volumes, and they are likely to prove very interesting.

LORD HARRIS, Governor-Elect of Bombay, arrived in the Indian Marine steamer Tenasserim on April 10th, and was accorded an enthusiastic reception. The Bombay Municipality presented an address of welcome.

H.E. LORD REAY left Bombay for England in the P. and O. s.s. Oriental. During the week his Excellency received farewell addresses from the Bombay Medical Union, the Chiefs of Kattiawar, the Surat Municipality and other institutions.

LORD REAY presided for the last time at Bombay Legislative Council on April 9th, when the Bombay Police Act was passed. On April 8th he opened the Allbless Obstetric Hospital.

LADY REAY received an address of farewell from the ladies of Bombay and the Purdah ladies.

MR. GRATTAN GEARY, President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, filed a criminal information in the Police Court for a false and malicious libel uttered by a Mr. N. S. Symons, imputing that he had expressed open sympathy with the Fenians, and was, therefore, not a fit chairman for the Albert Victor Reception Committee. The Court fined Symons Rs. 300, with the alternative of three months' imprisonment.

THE ladies of Bombay are collecting subscriptions for a bust or statue of Lady Reay.

A NEW hospital at Sholapur is to be named after Lady Reay, as a tribute to her ladyship's labours on behalf of female medical relief.

AT a public meeting held in the Town Hall, Bombay, it was agreed to erect a statue to Lord Reay. Rs. 33,700 was reported to have been already subscribed.

THEIR EXCELLENCIES LORD AND LADY LANSDOWNE AND SUITE will arrive in Mussoorie about the middle of this month, en route to Simla, via Chakrata and through the hills.

A REPRESENTATION was handed in to Government on Wednesday by the Duke of Connaught Memorial Committee in favour of the project for establishing a military college as a memorial to his Royal Highness.

THE Civil and Military Gazette hears on very good authority that it has been decided that Sir F. Roberts will not have another year's extension of office, but it is quite possible he may remain out over the cold weather to meet the convenience of his successor, who will probably not arrive in India till the end of next March.

THE Chinese Amban is now at Darjeeling, en route for Lhasa. The ratification of the treaty is expected in about two months.

MUCH anxiety is felt as to the probable scarcity of water at Simla during the coming season.

INFLUENZA is spreading rapidly through Simla. Business in Calcutta is also variously affected by the epidemic.

THE investigations that are being made by the Geological Survey Department of India into the existence of coal in the Darjiling district are to be continued for some time longer.

IT is proposed to construct a loop line of railway to connect the towns of Narnoul and Kanand, in Patiala territory, with the Rewari-Ferozepore and Rajputana Malwal railways.

NOTES.

THERE is little to comment upon in the news received from India to-day either by wire or Overland Mail. The Congress Committee at Calcutta, who have organised that a number of meetings shall be held, at which motions will be proposed declaring that Lord Cross' Bill is viewed with apprehension and alarm, and that if passed it will create deep and widespread discontent, are only "letting off steam." By this time they will have learnt how Babu Surendro Nath Banerjee has affected Clerkenwell and the British nation.

ACCORDING to the telegram from the correspondent of the Daily News despatched from Calcutta on Sunday night, two large meetings have been held in Calcutta. The speakers all belonged to the middle class of Hindoos, some speaking in English, others in Bengali. The streets in the neighbourhood of the meetings were decorated, and banners were displayed bearing the words, "No nomination," "No taxation without representation," "Justice to India," and "Bradlaugh for ever." Meetings have also been held in a number of Bengal Mofussil towns, at which similar motions have been passed, and a petition to Parliament decided on. The Mohammedans are everywhere holding opposition meetings.

THERE is no cause for alarm in all this. All Babudom may shout "Bradlaugh for ever!" but there the matter will end. He has yet not been so honoured even by that class as Prince Albert Victor has, to whom a Hindu temple is to be inscribed at Multa. Some Bengalis in that city of Hindu pilgrimage have built a temple for the location of the Goddess Kali. The inscription to be put on the entrance of the temple will be worded as follows:—"God Save His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor. Landed in India, November, 1889."

THE Bombay papers are filled with the accounts of the ceremonial farewells, &c., on the occasion of Lord Reay's taking leave of the presidency over which he has governed neither wisely nor well. The Natives, to whom he played the sympathising friend have, of course, been profuse in their adulations, and their praise has been smeared on him as though it were ghee. They are going to give him a statue, "so as to add him to their Valhalla of Anglo-Indian heroes."

BUT this is what the leading paper of the Presidency, the Times of India, says:—"It would be idle to attempt to discuss the fact that his Lordship's departure is heralded with pleasure by every branch of the services, Covenanted and Uncovenanted. It is difficult to say whether the members of the Civil Service, the Public Works Department, the Medical Service, the Educational Department, or the Forest Department take the most satisfaction in thinking that the disheartening experiences of the last few years are over. The feeling in the services is very strong, and this we must remember is the opinion entertained of Lord Reay by the men who have had the best opportunities of knowing what he really is, and what he has actually done. His appointment, now that we can look back upon it, was a blunder from the first, and we hope the mistake will never be repeated of sending a foreigner to rule over a dependency where it is essential that the prestige of the English name should be kept up, where the first qualification necessary in a ruler is a determination to do nothing to weaken that, and where, above all else, an Englishman's word should be his bond."

REGARDING the proposed factory legislation for India the Pioneer says that the general opinion there is that the measure goes too far in imposing restrictions upon Native workers in mills:—"The sensational stories about the 'slavery' of women and children have been concocted, of course, for home consumption. They have no real basis of truth, and the operatives themselves would be the first to deny them. In Bombay, Calcutta and elsewhere the most prosperous families among the working classes are those whose members are employed in local mills, and ample evidence is forthcoming that they are contented with their lot. Mr. Holt Hallett may urge in the English Press that the regulations adopted at the Berlin Conference for limiting the labour of women and children should be made the basis of the Indian Factory Act, but his opinion on such a matter will carry no weight in this country. His object is to win the approval of Lancashire manufacturers, with a view to gaining their support for his railway schemes in Siam and the Southern Shan States, the impracticability of which we have frequently noticed. Against his opinion we may place that of the Calcutta Trades Association, who have just addressed the Bengal Government on the subject. They deprecate any further action on the part of the legislature which might tend to injure and depress manufacturing industries, and consider that the amended Bill now under consideration is both unnecessary and objectionable. The Secretary of State should take careful note of the views expressed in India before allowing himself to be coerced by English millowners, whose sole object is to check the out-turn of Bombay factories."

SEVERAL newspapers in India, commenting on the recent fatal accidents at polo, have advocated the military authorities discountenancing the game altogether; and one paper has even gone as far as to state that Sir Frederick Roberts is about to issue an order to the army prohibiting polo tournaments. The Civil and Military Gazette says that if the military authorities meditate taking any action in this direction, it will be a complete reversal of their present policy. An order now exists to the effect that, when an officer applies to enter the Cavalry branch of the Indian service, his commanding officer is to report, among other things, whether the applicant is fond of pig-sticking and polo."

THE following ought to interest Mr. Goschen. Under the heading "Disclosure of Budget Secrets" the Rangoon Gazette says:—"It is curious that the Jews are the only people in Rangoon who received, in time to profit by it, intelligence of the raising of the rate of duty on spirits to Rs. 6 per gallon, which took place last week. On Friday we were asked by more than one European firm if we had received a telegram on the subject. We had not; and we learn that even the Chief Collector of Customs did not receive intimation of the change until after business hours on Friday. In the meantime some of the Jewish firms here had got the information from their Calcutta friends, and were able to purchase large quantities of liquor from the European importers without the enhancement in the rate of duty being taken into consideration. The change was made suddenly and secretly; but it looks as if someone in Calcutta had made the intentions of Government known to some particular friends. The delay in apprising the Chief Collector of Customs at Rangoon of the change is remarkable, and someone should be 'wiggled' for the omission. The intentions of Government in such a matter should be made known simultaneously to all interested. Meantime, the Jews have scored in being enabled to purchase large quantities of liquor at two rupees below its market value. Of course, if the merchants have stipulated in their contracts that changes in the rate of duty are to affect the price of the liquor, they will be able to recover the extra rupee per gallon from the purchasers; but, we believe, few, if any, of them ever adopt this precaution."

THE Times of India says:—"There is a good prospect of an Indian team being formed to compete at home at the annual meeting of the National Rifle Association in July next. As the competition will take place at the new and untried ranges at Brookwood, colonial and home competitors will, as regards the peculiarities of the ranges, stand on an almost equal footing this year. Endeavours are being made to obtain concessions so as to reduce the rates of travelling expenses, not only by the sea route, but also by the overland route, so that members of the team who can only obtain short leave may have the opportunity of accustoming themselves to the great variations of light, atmosphere, &c., prevailing in England as compared with India. It is to be hoped the scheme of forming a representative Indian team will not fall through, but in any case the Indian Volunteers are pretty sure to be represented this year at the great English shooting tournament."

SOME modifications have been made in the terms under which grants of land are officers and men in Upper Burma belonging to the military police on conclusion of their service under Government. The area to be granted is not to exceed 200 acres for a commissioned officer, half that space for the non-commissioned ranks, and 50 acres for privates. The provisions regarding free tenure and future assessment are liberally framed, and Government offer loans on easy terms to those who may need them. The districts in which land can be taken up in large areas are Katha and Shwebo, through which the new Mu Valley Railway and its extensions will pass. In Shwebo there are 40,000 acres available, and it is stated that hardly any expenditure will be necessary for clearing the ground and providing a water-supply.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA APRIL 27.

The National Congress wirepullers are now busily engaged in getting up an agitation against Lord Cross's Councils Bill. Their organs publish daily a series of telegrams from various parts of Bengal giving accounts of meetings which are invariably described as crowded and enthusiastic. These telegrams, as a rule, come from more or less obscure provincial towns, while the lists of the speakers at the meetings seldom contain any well-known or influential names. Two meetings with the same object were held in Calcutta yesterday, but here, too, there seems to have been a scanty attendance of the upper classes of Hindoo society, and the speakers for the most part were men who are best known as leaders in the Congress movement. Resolutions were passed to the effect that the meetings viewed Lord Cross's Bill with alarm, and thought the time had come when elective institutions might be introduced, also that reform and expansion of the Councils as embodied in Mr. Bradlaugh's Bill had become essential in the interests of England and India.

Attempts will, of course, be made to represent these meetings as indicating the opinion of the entire Hindoo population, whereas in fact they have the support of only a small but noisy section. Several leading Native newspapers condemn them strongly; thus Reis and Rayet says the whole thing is suspicious in the extreme, and has all the elements of a discreditable hole-and-corner movement. Hope, another Native newspaper, points out that the British Government has promptly met the first demand on the part of educated India to be admitted to a share in the management of the country's affairs, and India should receive the privileges now about to be conferred with a spirit of conciliation and not with condemnation.

Meanwhile, the Mahomedans are not relaxing their efforts to make their wishes known to Parliament. The petition of their patriotic association in favour of Lord Cross's Bill has received over 23,000 signatures, while the petition to the same effect, prepared by the National Mahomedan Society of Calcutta, has been adopted by 57 branch societies in all parts of India, and will probably receive not fewer than 100,000 signatures.

The commercial community of Calcutta have been somewhat alarmed by what appears to be a hasty and ill-considered step on the part of the income-tax authorities. A requisition was issued lately, calling upon the merchants to submit a return showing the names of the persons who consign goods to them for sale, and the profits made by the consignors on the sale of their consignments. Some little time ago the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce raised the question whether the income-tax should be levied on the profits on consignments made by persons not residing in British India. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce took the matter up and represented it to the Government, which replied that the subject had been referred to the local authorities for consideration. It is understood that all the local administrations except Madras expressed the opinion that such profits should be exempted, and the Chamber is now pressing the Supreme Government to issue orders, accordingly, as it believes that delay in doing so will have a damaging effect on trade.

In the course of the debate on the Budget in the Legislative Council a month ago, Sir Alexander Wilson, speaking on behalf of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, expressed the entire concurrence of that body with the Finance Minister's policy of refusing to make the cash balance at the Government treasuries available to the public for the furtherance of trade. The Upper India Chamber of Commerce Association, which is chiefly concerned with the cotton, grain, and seed trades, has now published a letter taking a directly opposite view. The members argue that, since the custom has been discontinued of making district balances available for short-date advances to the banks, money has become much dearer, and the natural development of agriculture and trade has been seriously restricted. They add that, if the rule be not modified, both agriculture and trade will be crippled.

The 33rd Madras Infantry, one of the regiments which has been abolished in connection with the scheme for a new local levy for Burma, was formerly disbanded at Madras on Monday, and its arms were lodged in the arsenal. The Native officers, the majority of the non-commissioned officers, and a portion of the rank and file will be pensioned, while the remainder will be drafted to other regiments. The Madras Press protested strongly against the disbandment, and it is understood that the local Commander-in-Chief also tried to prevent it.

A murderous assault was made on the Dewan of Cambay some days ago. A man entered the room where he was lying in bed and attempted to cut his throat. The assailant was interrupted and rushed out and managed to effect his escape, but subsequently he was arrested. There seems to have been two men implicated, one of whom kept watch outside while the other scaled the wall of the house, although it was guarded by five sepoy. The prisoners have made a full confession. The Dewan's wounds are slight, and he is progressing favourably.

The influenza epidemic now appears to be dying out in Calcutta and the plains, after having attacked a large proportion of the population and for a time seriously interfered with business. It is, however, still prevalent at the hill stations, where it has assumed a severer form. Several deaths have occurred at Simla, the victims being for the most part Bengalee clerks in the public offices.

The official Gazette announces that the Government have approved of a reconnoissance for a line of railway from Jubbulpore to Nagpore. The survey will be commenced shortly.

A Lahore paper states that the quarrel between Umra Khan of Jandol and his neighbours of Bajaur and Swat is growing to dimensions which may necessitate the interference of the Indian Government. An emissary from the chiefs of the two little frontier States has passed Peshawur on his way to entreat the Ameer's assistance against Umra Khan. He goes first to the Shinwari country to interview Gholam Haider Charhi, the Ameer's Commander-in-Chief. Failing success there he will go on to see the Ameer, who is still at Masar-i-Sherif.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, APRIL 26.

Brigadier-General Symons is still at Haka superintending the arrangements for the garrison. The expedition will cease to be on a field service footing on the 30th inst. Brigadier-General Symons is expected to arrive at Rangoon about May 20.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 27.

The Lushai chief Vantura, who was detained at Fort Tregear, escaped on the 17th inst. It is believed that he has gone to join Lienpunga, who is still at large.

The road to Haka has now been completed, after very arduous work.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 26.

Sir C. Crosthwaite is going to Sandoway, on the Arracan coast. This locality was recently the scene of a somewhat serious fire, when a large portion of the town was burned. This is the Chief Commissioner's first visit to Arracan during his tenure of office.

The prevalence of leprosy in Upper Burma is attracting some attention.

The influenza epidemic has reached Mandalay.

A police-station in Upper Burma has been burned by dacoits.

The cadastral survey of the Kyanksai district, one of the most fertile and best irrigated in Upper Burma, is nearly finished. According to the percentage rate on the area found in cultivation the revenue should be ten lakhs, instead of five lakhs, which the district now pays. The rate will probably be reduced, but there will be a substantial increase in the revenue.

INDIAN OFFICERS ON LEAVE IN ENGLAND.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We have already notified that the authorities at the War and India Offices have decided that it will be expedient for the Commander-in-Chief in India to notify to officers of the Indian Army, by means of a general order, that such officers, when in England, and subject to military law, are placed for disciplinary purposes under the command of the Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at the Horse Guards. The necessity for this order, however, does not arise from a want of legal means of enforcing authority over officers of the Indian service on leave in England. It is true the India Office have had some doubt as to whether the Secretary of State for India has legal power to order the arrest of an officer in England, or to enforce his return to this country; but there has never been any doubt whatever that the military authorities at home have the legal power to enforce authority over Indian Officers. It has always been the opinion, and is now the opinion of the highest military legal authority, that the Commander-in-Chief in India, or the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency in which an officer would be serving if not on leave, is the superior officer of the latter while he is on leave in England or elsewhere for the purposes of section 9, Army Act, 1881; and that the disobedience of a lawful command emanating from either such superior officer would subject the offender to the penal consequences of that section; and also that the same consequences are attached to the disobedience of a lawful command given to such officer through the Adjutant-General of the Forces, Horse Guards. It was, however, considered undesirable that the Commander-in-Chief at home or the Adjutant-General, Horse Guards, should personally exercise this authority, and it became necessary to determine in what way it could be legally delegated to an Indian Military officer holding office in England. It was at first proposed to delegate this authority to the Military Secretary at the India Office, but this fell through owing to the fact that this appointment can be, and now is, held by an officer who, being on the retired list, cannot exercise military command. The Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at the Horse Guards was then selected, and it is this officer who will now have the legal power to personally exercise authority over Indian officers in England, as soon as the necessary notification is made in the General Orders of the Commander-in-Chief in India. It is probable that the notification would have been issued by the India Office had it not been considered preferable, by the Judge Advocate-General, London, that this delegation should be from the military representative of the Crown, rather than from a Secretary of State. In future, the procedure in this matter will be, practically, somewhat as follows:—Should any officer of the Indian Army, while in England, and subject to military law, disobey the order of the Secretary of State to return to India, or should it be thought necessary to place such officer under arrest, the Secretary of State for India will instruct the Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at the Horse Guards to place him under arrest, and, if necessary, to order him to proceed under arrest to embark on board a troopship. If this order were disobeyed or evaded, it would then be legal to send a military escort to apprehend him, and convey him under military custody to the port of embarkation. The officer commanding the troops on board the vessel would then take charge of him, and hand him over, under arrest, on arrival in India, to the military authorities in this country. To sum up briefly, all this means that the legal power of personally exercising authority over Indian officers in England which up to date has been vested in the Commander-in-Chief at home or the Adjutant-General to the Forces only, is now delegated to the Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at the Horse Guards—or an officer of the Indian army on the active list. It is presumed that the interests of the officers concerned will not suffer by the delegation.

A HAPPY VALLEY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The existence in a state of real independence of a group of small republics lying along both banks of the Indus, from Bunji to our district of Hazara on the left bank, and Swat on the right, is interesting, and points doubtless to the conclusion that Muhammadanism is of recent introduction in this practically unknown tract lying just beyond our frontier. The name Shinaki, by which the tract of country is known, means the country of the Shins, and is that used by the people themselves and by their neighbours when speaking of this portion of the Indus valley. Dardistan was a name coined by Dr. Leitner and applied to it, but it is quite unrecognised along the Indus; only one small section of one of the scattered tribes is known, and that not generally, by the name of Dard. On the right bank of the Indus, commencing from Bunji, come the small states of Gor, Darel and Tangir, in the order named. Besides these there are a few yet smaller colonies, in some cases speaking distinct dialects, in various narrow valleys running into the Indus. To the north of these States, divided from them by a range of mountains forming the northern Indus watershed, lie from east to west the valleys of Gilgit, Punjab, and the territories of the Mehtar of Chitral. On the left bank of the river, again starting from Bunji, are the Bhilas and some smaller valleys bordering on Hazara.

The origin of the races inhabiting these valleys is lost in the mists of ages. Questions of great ethnological interest still remain to be settled, and when the country is safe for Europeans to travel in, a fine field for research will be thrown open. The valleys are by their configuration much isolated, roads practically do not exist, and the people are consequently in a state of civilisation not far removed from that of their progenitors, who may have wandered into their mountain fastnesses from the borders of the Punjab. Traces of Hinduism, of Buddhism, of customs which seem to point to a connection with the Kafirs, still exist. In some of the States, Chilas for instance, the extreme bigotry of modern conversion is rampant; in others the faith seems to have but slight hold; divination is practised, and quaint ceremonies, connected with tree worship, it would seem, are still performed, in which boughs of a tree practically still considered sacred are burnt; the name of the tribal god is still remembered, possibly revered, and everything points to a very recent adhesion to the tenets of the Prophet. Practically independent as these States are, they are almost all yet nominally tributary to some powerful neighbour. Tangir, in return for certain grazing rights in Yasin, pays tribute to the Mehtar of Chitral, and at the same time is ever ready to harbour his enemies belonging to the exiled family of the former rulers of Yasin. Darel owes nominal allegiance to Gilgit and its princes, and has now transferred that allegiance to Kashmir since the day when the valley was entered by the Kashmir troops from Gilgit. Gor, which formerly had some share in the ground on the left bank of the Indus about Bunji and Chilas, are also tributary to the Maharaja of Kashmir, who is in the unique position of being suzerain over these independent Muhammadan republics. The system of Government in all these States is purely democratic. Certain men are selected as village representatives who meet to discuss any subject of importance, but their decisions seem practically to be subject to the approval of the people. Although there are of course influential and rich men amongst them as compared to the mass of the people, yet there are none answering in position to the Khans of the Pathan tribes lower down the Indus.

It will be many years, probably, before travellers will be able to penetrate into the valleys inhabited by these tribes, who value the liberty which their isolation gives them too highly, lightly to run the risk of exciting the lust of conquest in their neighbours by throwing open their country. No Kashmir official has, we believe, ever penetrated into the valleys tributary to the Maharaja, except on the occasions of the invasions of Chitral and Darel, and it is unlikely that the tribes would be at all eager to welcome any Englishman. Blest in most cases with a good though hot climate, with soil which yields abundant crops, with forests of fine timber, and fruit trees innumerable, the lot of the inhabitants of these States is not an unhappy one; no tax gatherer calls upon them, and they are masters of their property in a way which the unhappy Kashmiri cultivator or the lower classes in Chitral and the neighbouring countries do not even dream of; and not unnaturally all they wish for is peace and isolation.

THE SIMLA EXODUS.

(Statesman.)

The waste of public money and time involved in the annual migration of the Government of India to the hills, the periodical dislocation of public business twice in every year, and the loss of all touch with such public opinion as is to be found in the Presidency cities—serious as these considerations undoubtedly are—have ever in our own eyes been subordinate to the political mischief of which this wholesale exodus has been the prolific source. It is because the general character of the administration suffers so heavily by the annual retreat of the Supreme Executive to the remotest corner of the Empire, that we feel bound to repeat our protest against it again and again. That the practice has become full of grave evil, and that it is inconsistent with anything like "earnestness" in the administration of the Empire, has long been painfully clear to ourselves. It is with no cynical feelings of any kind that we refer to this matter. We wish sincerely that the exile of every Indian official may be made as endurable and as pleasant as possible; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that this immunity is being purchased at ruinous cost to the administration. It is not possible in the nature of things than an administration carried on in the dilletante, unwholesome spirit should be animated with any really high morale or true earnestness of purpose. So keenly was General Napier Campbell conscious of the fact, that during the progress of the Afghan War in 1878-79, he absolutely refused to administer the Ordnance Department from Simla, and, as is well known, incurred very great odium for his resolution. What little force public opinion exerts is spent in Calcutta itself almost as soon as it finds utterance in the Press or in the meetings of the various associations in our midst. Long before these utterances reach the hills, they have become a mere echo. The telegraph at once discounts and dissipates what little force the original utterances may have had, and the official mind reads with languid, if not cynical, indifference the expression of feelings and views that would have elicited action of some kind or other if presented fresh to the mind. We see this constantly, if we care to see it. And we hope to govern 250 millions of people successfully by an administration of this feeble and paralytic type. But the evil does not end here. It manifests itself in a more aggravated form in the unjust wars, military expeditions, and annexations of territory that are hatched in Simla. It may be affirmed with absolute certainty that we owed not only the first Afghan War, under Lord Auckland, but the second, under Lord Lytton, directly to this practice of going to Simla. There would have been no Afghan War in 1838 had Lord Auckland remained in Calcutta, nor any second war had Lord Lytton not been at Simla in 1878. The atmosphere of Simla, with its round of frivolities, is the very air in which a lot of military men, getting together with nothing but amusement for their object, find inaction unendurable, and readily persuade themselves that the game of war would be a very pleasant excitement as a mere change from lawn-tennis and billiards. Costly as this exodus of our officials has become of late years under the practice of dragging their establishments after them, to the great discomfort, loss, and even suffering of the latter, it is the palpable demoralisation that springs from it that has chiefly impressed our own mind for many years past. We owe both Afghan Wars and, with few exceptions, most of the intermediate and subsequent wars and annexations very distinctly to the Government being located at Simla, with nothing for its mass of military hangers-on to do but watch for the appearance of a Cossack boot within a thousand miles of their Himalayan retreat. The sense of sobriety gets lost in the excitement of a long and brilliant holiday, and the Empire takes care of itself until the time comes for a reluctant return to the plains. So strong was the conviction of the late Sir John Kaye—by no means a hostile witness—on this point that in his history of the first Afghan War he had no hesitation in describing Simla as “the cradle of more political insanity than any place within the limits of Hindoostan.” In confirmation of this view we shall cite one instance which will be in the memory of most of our readers. All through the years 1877 and 1878 we saw with painful clearness that Lord Lytton’s residence in Simla, and the presence there of a large body of military idlers impatient of inaction, meant potential war. We warned the country all through 1877 and 1878 of what was coming. It was in the air two years before it came upon Parliament as a surprise, and it was distinctly the frivolity of the atmosphere that engendered the crime. When the war was at last declared the state of unpreparedness in every department of the army was almost incredible. The history has been hushed up, and the Indian public does not know to this hour the shameful confusion in which the war began, and the reckless manner in which it was carried on. A more demoralised administration than that which ruled India at the break up of the Simla season of 1878 the country has never seen. The evil has now seized upon all departments. It is no longer simply the Viceroy and Council who cannot discharge their duty in the plains—it seems that none of the Imperial departments can. For Indian service to be endurable at all it must be a long holiday from one year’s end to another, the Imperial Government with the whole of the departments in its train migrating from Calcutta to Simla, and from Simla to Calcutta to escape the conditions of service upon which their whole scale of pay and allowance has been fixed. For every English officer who is thus permitted to evade the conditions of his service, twenty, thirty, forty Native subordinates are dragged into exile at his heels, and made to endure the sufferings of a severe winter at the top of a mountain range, 1,000 miles from their homes in Bengal, and on a scale of pay altogether inadequate to meet their necessities in such a climate. If the present practice is to be continued the pay of the superior officers should, in common fairness, be cut down to the scale of service in England, and the pay of the Native subordinates so raised as to enable them to endure the privations and sufferings of an exile for years amidst the snows. We shall conclude with some extracts from a Minute recorded by the late Sir H. M. Durand, who, as Foreign Secretary, had nine years’ practical experience of the results of this Simla migration. Apart from the facts which he notices that “for two months in the year there is a bond fide paralysis of work,” and the consequent strain put upon the Government during the brief Calcutta season, which he declared to be “unfavourable to the satisfactory consideration and execution” of legislative business. Sir Henry Durand dwells with much force on the inaccessibility of Simla from the most important centres in the plains. “If time,” he says, “be of any moment in the affairs of this world and age, Simla would tie down the Government to the most unfavourable position that could well be selected with regard to postal and telegraphic communications. It is difficult to choose a point in the map of India that shall more successfully solve the problem of being as remote as possible from Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Kurrachee, and, of course, England. Three or four marches in the mountains, and on the left bank of the Sutlej, its position secures its being cut off from Lahore and the Punjab during the rains by the Sutlej and Beas, and secures a maximum of delay in communications with Lahore and Peshawar.” These and equally weighty considerations have repeatedly been pressed upon the attention of the Government, but in vain. No strength of remonstrance in India, we fear, will achieve any reform; and it is to the interference of Parliament only that we can look with any hope.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION IN CALCUTTA.

(Statesman.)

In stating a few days ago our objections to the mode of municipal assessment adopted in Calcutta we pointed out that the most indefensible feature of the present system is that, while laying the whole burden of taxation upon the landlords, it practically leaves untouched every other class of the community, who are quite as justly liable to contribute towards the cost of the vast works of local improvement that we all alike desire to see carried out, and that will equally benefit us all. In spite of the heavy injustice involved in the present system of taxation the revenue raised therefrom does not realise one-tenth part of the income that the requirements of the city necessitate, and we shall never see any real improvement until the Government recognises its own responsibility in the matter by revising and recasting its present methods of municipal taxation. We have frequently stated our conviction that, looking attentively at the circumstances of Calcutta, the municipal revenues ought to be raised by a schedule of taxes that would reach everybody in a light form. Thus the Government of India might contribute its annual share to the proper conservancy and the necessary improvement of the city as the capital by contributing a town due of Rs. 10 per chest upon opium, and a small proportion of the excise duties on salt and liquor consumed in the city. The two Governments together might well contribute between them ten lakhs a-year in this way. The merchants should contribute in the shape of a minute town due upon the number of packages of merchandise brought into Calcutta as the great fair or emporium of their commerce with India. The inward and outward trade of Calcutta, including the country trade, cannot fall very short of £100,000,000 sterling a year. One per cent. on that amount would be many times heavier than was necessary, and light town dues of an anna or two per bale would yield an income of 12 to 25 lakhs. The house-tax recast, made a real house-tax and levied upon the occupier instead of the owner, would yield not very much less than now; while the ground landlord should be separately charged with a firm and adequate rating. Not a single municipal bill should ever approach the dwellings of the poor. They should contribute their share to the wants of the place, which so vitally concerns themselves, by minute duties levied upon a few of the leading articles of consumption in the city—rice, firewood, ghee, sugar and oil. The water rate should of course be retained, and the night-soil fees. With very little trouble indeed might an income of 60 lakhs be raised, while five-sixths of the municipal bills might be got rid of, with their attendant extortions and distress-warrants. What is impossible is persevering with the present system. It is unjust, oppressive in the last degree, unendurable, and altogether insufficient for our wants. But then, it is objected, these town dues partake of the nature of transit duties, which it is the policy of the Government to abolish “in the interests of trade.” With that gross inconsistency which is so often to be met with in Indian administration, the Government, while it will not allow the Bombay municipality to levy Rs. 2 a chest on opium for municipal purposes, does not scruple itself to exact as much as Rs. 700 on the same chest simply for seeking a right of way through British territory from the Native States of Malwa down to the seaport of Bombay. And yet the Government seems unconscious that it is levying a gigantic transit duty, black-mail of an order never before heard of in the world. The ceaseless struggles which our officials in the North-West have been carrying on with the municipalities there, to compel them to abandon octroi or town dues, perversely or through sheer stupidity denouncing them as transit dues, is of the same order as the refusal of the Government in 1868 to permit the Bombay municipality to levy minute town dues upon the piece-goods, metals, opium, &c., that come to the island as the great entrepôt of the trade. To speak of minute town dues as crippling trade is childish. It is to assume that trade cannot be profitably carried on unless the Government or the municipalities contribute something towards the cost of conducting it. You may of course pitch your town duty so high that it becomes blackmail, like our own imperial duty upon Malwa opium; but so long as the town duty is reasonable in amount, it is unreasonable that the trader should be exempt from paying it, interested as he is in the proper conservancy of the city and everything necessary to make it a well-ordered market. We have ever been at a loss to make out from what quarter the Civilian body of this country has got its political economy. Adam Smith declared it to be scarcely possible "to invent a more equitable way for maintaining the highways, bridges, and other works of a country than by imposing minute dues upon those who use them. Until this conflict between the Government and the people ceases, and the latter are encouraged to perfect their municipal arrangements by a well-considered system of town dues, they will never reach even decent management. For the direct rate system in this country is an impossibility, and if it is resolved that the people shall not raise their revenues in the only way in which it is possible to raise them, they must go without municipal improvements. The landlords of Calcutta are now engaged, we believe, in preparing a Memorial to the Government with a view to procuring an alteration in the law as touching the present inequitable mode of assessment. We have taken the opportunity, therefore, of urging once more these considerations—which will be recognised as the views of the late Mr. Knight—as to the form which municipal taxation should take. However great the injustice and hardship of which the landlords complain, the Government is not likely to abandon the sole existing source of municipal revenue until it can be assured of some other less objectionable form of obtaining the necessary sum of money to compensate the financial loss that the municipality would otherwise sustain. If, therefore, the landlords are able to indicate some other more acceptable method of taxation, they will greatly strengthen their own position thereby, besides earning the gratitude of the rate-payers in bringing about a much-needed reform.

HOW WE GOVERN THE EMPIRE.

(Madras Times.)

The very first requisite in the Government of the Empire ought to be indubitable strength. The people of India never appreciated and never will appreciate a weak ruler, be he Governor-General or Lieutenant-Governor. They will appreciate a reasonable man, a thoughtful man, a man who will weigh circumstances and facts before he ventures upon theory; but a weak man, a vacillating man in the seat of Government, they naturally abhor. Is it not reasonable that they should do so? There was a time in England's history when the land was overrun by robbers. Life and property were unsafe. A great king arose: a man of terrible strength. He put the law in force in a manner to which the people were not accustomed, and not many months elapsed before life and property became secure, and a proverb grew up and remained as a memento of the time, that one might have left a chain of gold on a tree by the road-side and no one would have dared to touch it. Again, at a much later period of English history there arose another stern ruler—not a king, but more than a king—who enforced the law with a like relentless severity. He passed away, and the English people, who always disliked severity, especially of the Puritan kind, fell into unheard-of license, and continued in that license for considerably more than one or two generations. Many old men remembered hearing from other old men of marked scoundrels like the "Mohawks" infesting the highways and byeways of London, committing depredations of the most atrocious kinds, and then moving in the society of ladies and gentlemen, the first in the land, proud of, and perhaps even boasting of, murders and worse. Happily, England had arrived at a stage when law came in to take the place of strong personal legal Government. A judge who meant right things was the representative of good government. The first principle of English progress was security to life and property. Without that nothing could be done. With that everything possible to man was possible to England.

India has had some strong rulers and some weak ones, but, as a rule, the English rulers in high authority have been strong. Perhaps it is owing to the peculiarities of the two races. The restless impetuosity that brings a man out to this country when he might be comfortable at home, is a sort of guarantee that he is at least resolved to hold his own. The old East India Company had two aims in electing its Governors:—First, it required strength and capacity; secondly, it required docility, and a general view of men and things. The Directors hated one of the best men this country ever saw—Sir Charles Napier. He was the man to save an Empire, but he would brook no abuses. For, less politic than Clive, honourable and unselfish to the last degree, a Bayard in peace and war, he yet wanted those gifts which are absolutely necessary to accommodate an Eastern people to a Western rule. Clive took the country as he found it. He was strong in every sense of the term strength. He was truer than the rest of men with whom he came in contact. Unquestionably, he was a better Governor than if he had even a truer conscience and a less inexorable will; and though India has no interest in will without conscience, in will with conscience, in inexorable justice, in a determination that never quails, she has the strongest interest. We throw out these remarks as a hint to those whom they may concern. The things first of all indispensable in Indian rule are strong will and stern justice. A just man, for instance, would draw no more from the resources of the country than was absolutely necessary, and would not suffer any man, or body of men, to grow rich at the cost of the poverty of the people. But he who dares to do this must not only be just, but fearless. No other course possible would make so many powerful enemies, but no other course would lead to certain and enduring fame. Such a man must of necessity strike all round, at all shams, and doing this, he could scarcely fail to win the honour and gratitude of all honest men. Even if there were no gratitude, even if there were no honour, none the less would it be to the advantage of the individual Governor that he possessed an inexorable will. Otherwise he could have no security for peace and ordinary comfort. Once let it be known that a Governor-General, or a Lieutenant-Governor, is ready to be guided by other minds, even when opposed to his own, and his lot becomes far from enviable. Every time he yields to "influences," social or political, is the step to a fresh yielding and the occasion for fresh "influences" to be set at work. The true rulers of India, we say, have been men who thought for themselves, who acted for themselves, and who never suffered any influence to sway them when there was a great right on the one side, and a great wrong on the other. India wants more men of this stamp, and we who watch her dearest interests, devoutly pray that Heaven will send us more of them, if indeed the Empire is to be held, and the honour and prestige of the British nation is to survive in this country.

ANGLO-INDIAN CELEBRITIES AT HOME.—II.

THE REV. LUKE RIVINGTON AT TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER.

(Times of India.)

It is in one of the quiet Bayswater streets which the Anglo-Indian loves so well that the Rev. Luke Rivington has for the nonce pitched his tent. There is an air of somnolent repose about the thoroughfare, broken only by the cry of the milkman, the sound of the muffin bell, the noisy jingle of the hurdy-gurdy and other like sounds, from which even the remotest quarters of the great city are not exempt. Not, however, that the Talbot-road is in any sense an obscure locality. A short side street takes you from it into the bustle and life of Westbourne-grove, with its crowded pavements, its pretentious shops, its itinerant hawkers, its army of nurse-maids, and perambulators, and its general air of suburban activity. It is, in fact, well in touch of the busy world while away from its noise and glare, and for that reason is peculiarly adapted to one who unites the duties of an active priest with the labours of the theological student. A few minutes' walk takes Father Rivington—as we may still call him, though he himself has discarded the appellation—to the Church of St. Mary of the Angels hard by, where he is conducting a series of mission services, and electrifying crowded congregations with his fervent eloquence, while in his quiet sitting-room he has as much peace as is vouchsafed to the dweller within the limits of the four-mile radius. The position is, perhaps, not an ideal one for a man of his bent of mind, but it serves his present purpose, and until the call of duty summons him elsewhere he is quite content to accept it.

Father Rivington has not altered much since that, to him, eventful day in Bombay, when he said his last word in an Anglican pulpit, and bade farewell for ever to the doctrinal traditions in which he had been reared, and spent the half century of his existence. An additional line or two on the face, and an extra streak of grey in the hair, perhaps, might be detected; but that was all. The sturdy, well-knit figure, the shapely head, and, above all, the smooth smiling features, so suggestive of kindness of heart mingled with great intellectual power, were the same which have impressed themselves so vividly on his Bombay friends. But though to all outward seeming he might still be the popular Cowley Father of old days, it is impossible to be long with him without detecting a difference. Whether you intend it or not, the conversation inevitably turns on the great step of Father Rivington's life, and then you realise the great gulf that separates him from the Father Rivington of other days. The earnest and energetic defender of Anglican rites and doctrines of yore has given place to the humble seeker after divine grace under the shadow of the great dome of St. Peter. The enthusiastic controversialist, who a few short years ago was ready to break a lance with the acutest intellects of the then rival communion, to-day acknowledges that he has all his life lived in error and schism, and that the pages of the great book of Truth have only just been opened to him. He makes the confession in no spirit of false abnegation. His experience is to him like that of a man who, having wandered in a wilderness all his life, suddenly emerges into a magnificent country, whose delights are greater as he had hitherto been ignorant of them. Formerly he was happy in existing only; now he lives in all the enjoyment of a glorious life, and wonders that he could so long have remained contented with his former state. His friends, he tells you, think that he must be unhappy, but, so far from that, he never knew what happiness was until two years since. The causes which produced this great change in Father Rivington's views were not the work of a day. A man of his commanding intellect does not renounce the belief of a long and active life without many searchings of heart and much anxious study. It is now just five years since the present writer stood with him on the terrace of the noble Campo Santo at Messina. The magnificent panorama around, with its rich and olive-clad hills, with here and there the castle of some Sicilian grandee peeping out of the midst of the foliage and the snowy slopes and smouldering peak of restless Etna in the background, had been duly admired, and the elegant grace of the Corinthian façade of the Campo Santo itself had been noted, and attention was concentrated on the numerous chaste monuments of departed worthies which met the eye in every direction. As inscription after inscription was read, asking the prayers of passers-by for the souls of the departed, the conversation insensibly turned on the efficacy of such appeals. Father Rivington expressed his views in that quiet earnest way which is peculiarly his own. It is unnecessary to reproduce here his remarks in detail. Suffice it to say that the substance of his argument was that prayers for the dead were not only praiseworthy, but an essential of religious life, and that in this respect the Romish Church taught purer doctrine than its Anglican sister. Considering the section of the English Church to which he then belonged, it was not altogether surprising to hear such unqualified approval of a practise which is so unsparingly condemned by Evangelical thought. But when a little later, on one of the humbler officials of the cemetery making him a profound obeisance, evidently under the impression from his dress that he was a Roman Catholic priest, he went on to relate with undisguised satisfaction how, when on a visit to Rome a short time previously he had often been similarly mistaken, and even asked to perform the rites of the church, it was evident that his previous conversation had significance of its own. The idea was a mere suspicion at the time, but from what has since fallen from Father Rivington's lips it has become a certainty. When on that occasion he was returning to Europe, shattered in health by his sojourn in India, his mind was troubled with doubts, which in due time brought their inevitable fruit, and landed him in the bosom of the Romish Church. The turning point in his career was the correspondence, doubtless well remembered in Bombay, between the Roman Catholic Bishop Meurin, on the one hand, and the Anglican Bishop Mylne, on the other, as to the pastoral letter issued by the Calcutta Synod. This deliverance, it will be recollected, was criticised by Bishop Meurin, who took exception to the Apostolical credentials of the Anglican Bishops, and Bishop Mylne briefly replied, declining to enter into a controversy on the subject. Father Rivington felt that this was not a satisfactory way of meeting the arguments adduced. As he terms it, he thought that it did not look well for the members of the Anglican priesthood to "sit like dumb dogs" while the foundations of faith were undermined. He accordingly entered into the lists and crossed swords with Bishop Meurin on his own account. A long correspondence ensued, part of which was made public, part of which has never seen the light. To all outward appearances, the controversy ended, as most controversies of the kind do, just as it had begun, but in reality it had produced most important fruits. Several points brought forward by Bishop Meurin, and subsequently elaborated in a pamphlet issued by a young theological student named Joseph Da Vida, doubtless under the inspiration of the Jesuit Fathers of the local seminary, Father Rivington felt at the time were unanswerable. He pondered the matter over long and anxiously, and time only served to increase his doubts. Proceeding to Europe shortly afterwards he availed himself of the opportunity of carefully going through the notes made during his fifteen years' work at All Saints, Margaret-street, of replies given to doubting inquirers on these very points. The examination only served to confirm him in his original belief. Bishop Meurin was right: the foundations of the Church of England were built upon sand; to Rome only had been given the Divine authority. Troubled in mind and struggling between a desire not to break with lifelong friends and an overwhelming sense of the necessity of following the course which his conscience dictated to him, he spent some time in a condition of painful uncertainty. Eventually, however, duty triumphed over personal feeling. Retracting his steps to Rome he made his submission to the Head of the Church, and was kindly and graciously received by the Holy Father, who did him the high honour of administering to him his first Communion on Easter morning, 1888, in his own private chapel, a mark of favour extended only to four others besides himself. The rest of the story is soon told. The period of probation necessary even in the case of the most learned converts Father Rivington spent at the St. Charles's College, South Kensington. The best part of two happy years were passed in retirement in this seminary, and then the distinguished novitiate assumed the functions of the Romish priesthood. His first mass, curiously enough, was performed in the ancient chapel of Towneley, in Lancashire, belonging to Lady O'Hagan, which is one of the few sacred edifices in the country which weathered the stress of the Reformation period, and can boast an unbroken record of the performance of Romish rites from the time of Henry VII. Singular, also, is the fact that on the same day he received into the Church one of the Sisters of All Saints, Margaret-street.

As a preacher Father Rivington has long had an almost unrivalled reputation. In his younger days at Oxford he studied elocution to some purpose under the instruction of one of the most famous actors of the day, and the lessons then learned have never been forgotten. Few who have ever heard him will soon forget the impressiveness of his delivery and the graceful character of his oratory. Well-turned sentences delivered with passionate earnestness flow easily and naturally from the speaker's lips, and, though there is abundance of gesture, it is always of the right kind, and never offends the eye. But it is not manner alone that has made Father Rivington's fame in the pulpit. There is a profundity of thought, a depth of conviction, and a wealth of illustration which make his sermons models of pulpit eloquence and ensure for them an attentive hearing. These qualities have served to recommend him to people of all classes and all races with whom he has cast his lot. At All Saints, Margaret-street, he drew all fashionable London to hear him; in the Riviera, to which he has been a frequent visitor, the gay habitués of the various resorts turned aside from their balls, their parties, and their theatricals to listen to grave discourses by him on the inspiration of the Scriptures or the tenets of Buddhism. While in India such was the depth of the impression he made on the Natives that he was on one memorable occasion at Aloartirunagar, in the Madras Presidency, granted the unprecedented concession of preaching in a Hindoo temple to a gathering of some thousands or more of the thrice-born. A preacher of such distinction cannot fail to make his mark still more decidedly in the future. The Roman Catholic Church is not so rich in young Englishmen of brilliant talents that one of Father Rivington's attainments cannot secure distinction. When those great leaders of thought, Cardinal Newman and Cardinal Manning, have passed away, there will be no one to adequately fill their place, and it will be for the younger men to show the world what they are capable of. In this friendly contest we may rest assured that Father Rivington will not prove the least worthy. He has abilities which fit him for the highest positions, and if he does not end his days as one of the great princes of the Church those who have followed his career closely are greatly mistaken.

ENGINEERING COLLEGES.

(Indian Daily News.)

We regret that we unwittingly did the Seebpore Engineering College some injustice the other day in contrasting it with the kindred institution at Madras to the advantage of the latter. Further inquiry has shown us that whereas there are some seventeen students in the "Engineering Department" of the Madras College, and ninety-two in the subordinate classes, the corresponding numbers at the Seebpore College are 87 and 177. The Engineer Class at Seebpore has greater attractions than that at Madras, inasmuch as the Bengal Government offers three appointments in the superior grades of the Public Works Department for competition in every two years to students of the local college, the Madras Government gives its College one only in each year. The course of study is similar in each case, being modelled on that of Cooper's Hill College. The number of students is not necessarily an nfalible indication of the measure of success achieved by an educational institution, and we are pleased to find that in other respects the Seebpore College is making gratifying progress. Some time ago, it will be remembered, there was a talk of closing the workshop attached to the College, on the ground that the youth of Bengal were found to have a rooted objection to manual labour of the kind required in engineering processes. Any such objection is extremely foolish, and we are pleased to be assured that Native youth are taking much more kindly to the practical portion of the training at Seebpore than they did formerly. Not only those in the subordinate classes, but all the students of the college are obliged to go through a course of the shops. The attention which Native capitalists are now beginning to devote to industrial pursuits should result in gradually opening up a large sphere of employment for Native young men, who have had the advantage of such a course of study and training as is open to them in Engineering Colleges like those at Seebpore, Madras, and Poona. The scheme which the Bengal Provincial Railway Company is being constituted to carry out is but a small affair in itself—merely the construction and working of some twenty miles of railway; but it is important as a beginning, and if this small venture should prove a success, as it ought to do in the hands of the gentlemen who have taken up the management, we may expect soon to see a considerable development of this novel form of Native enterprise. Fairly cheap and at the same time skilled labour will be in demand, and the Engineering Colleges and training shops will come to be better appreciated than they have been hitherto.

BENGAL.

(April 8.)

THE rate of Exchange in Calcutta at noon on Monday was 1s. 5½d.

HIS HIGHNESS RUN BAHADUR SINGH, Rajah of Tikari, who recently came to Calcutta for medical advice, died on Monday night. He was sixty years of age.

THE Native who passed himself off as a Subedar-Major of the Burma Police, and obtained Rs. 1,000 jewellery on inspection from Messrs. Hamilton and Company, Calcutta, last month, has been arrested at Lahore.

A CORRESPONDENT sends Indian Engineering a photograph of an old gun now lying in the jungle near the town of Bishenpur in Bengal. It is worthy of notice in so far that it is made of wrought iron in coils. Its history is not known. The outside diameter at muzzle is 19 inches; at touch-hole 29 inches; length 11 feet 9 inches; and bore 11½ inches. It is in perfect condition. Its weight would probably be considerably over six tons.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Calcutta contemporary says a neem tree was the scene of a curious superstitious gathering last Friday. It appears that the tree "has a number of white spots on its trunk and branches, as though the tree had got some disease. The people of the neighbourhood adorned the tree with red powder, and hung garlands of flowers upon it, and also offered fruits, spices, and even sacrificed goats, on the supposition that the goddess of small-pox had taken up her abode in the tree. The street was crowded with people, who came to make offerings, as they are greatly afraid of the supposed occupant of the tree." And this, remarks the Morning Post, in the capital of India near the close of the nineteenth century!

THE committee of the Calcutta Trades Association has addressed the Bengal Government on the Factories Act Amendment Bill, to the effect that they still hold the opinion which the Association held when the original Bill to regulate labour in factories was introduced in 1878; that legislation in this direction is not called for by circumstances connected with labour in Indian mills and workshops; but there is nothing within the knowledge of the Association to justify an Act of this description on this side of India; and that the committee strongly deprecate any further action on the part of the Legislature, which might tend to injure and depress the manufacturing industries of the country. Regarding the Bill as a whole, the committee consider it is both unnecessary and objectionable, and they trust that the Lieut.-Governor will recommend that it be withdrawn.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to a contemporary:—"Quite a tragedy has been enacted at Saharanpur, the Native marker attached to the Volunteer Corps having run amuck and killed his wife and a policeman. It would appear that the man went to one of the Volunteers and said that his arms were required for inspection, as the Sergeant-Instructor was coming down from Bareilly to inspect all the arms, &c. Putting the belt on and shouldering the rifle he went straight to his house close by and shot his wife dead. When pursued he ran off and took shelter in a disused kunker quarry, and when the police came up he fired the second shot, killing a constable. It would appear he had only two rounds of ammunition, so sitting down he fixed the bayonet on the rifle and held his own for a time. A Native, pluckier than the rest, stole round and suddenly pounced on the murderer from behind and secured him. It is not known how he managed to get possession of the ball ammunition. Though caught red-handed in the double murder the man denies his guilt.

MADRAS.

(April 9.)

THE coveted post of British Resident at Travancore and Cochin will shortly fall vacant on the retirement of Mr. J. C. Hannyngton, Madras Civil Service, who has held the appointment during the last eight years. It is believed that Mr. H. B. Grigg, Director of Public Instruction, Madras, will fill the vacancy.

BOMBAY.

(April 11.)

MR. R. W. PINHEY, Judge of the Court of Small Causes, has been allowed an extension of leave for six months.

MR. A. C. LOGAN has been appointed to act as Under-Secretary to Government in the Political, Judicial, Educational, and Legislative Departments, and Secretary to the Legislative Council.

THE Bombay Chamber of Commerce have elected Lord Reay an honorary member of that body, and his lordship has been pleased to accept the compliment.

COLONEL G. R. GOODFELLOW, C.I.E., has been allowed to take up his substantive appointment of Political Superintendent, Palanpur, and Colonel H. L. Nutt is appointed to act as Political Agent, Mahi Kantha, during the absence of Colonel W. Scott.

INFLUENZA still urges on its wild career. Here is one of its latest consequences:—"Notice—The manager of the Kattywar Times regrets to inform the public that the whole of his establishment is laid up with influenza, and that, therefore, there will be no issue of the journal till such time as the men recover.—Civil Station, Rajkote, April 7, 1890." This is the third newspaper in Eastern latitudes that has been compelled to stop publication from the same cause.

The following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season report for the past week:—Slight rain during week in parts of Kurrachee. Exotic cotton in two talukas of Dharwar blighted; jowari in Ahmednuggar middling, and late crops in Satara, except gram, below average. Standing crops otherwise good. Harvesting of late crops progressing generally, and cotton picking in Gujerat, Southern Mahratta Country, and Baroda. Probable outturn of opium and cotton in Baroda 12 and 16 annas respectively. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in Kurrachee, Shikarpore, Khandeish, Colaba, Poona, Sholapore, Bijapore, and Kattywar. Fodder scarce in two talukas of Khandeish, Poona, and Dharwar, and one of Nassik. Water scarce in two talukas of Nassik and one of Dharwar.

THE following appointments and promotions are made with effect from the date of Colonel Grant's departure on furlough, terminating his lien on his civil appointment:—Mr. E. Hosking to be Judge and Sessions Judge of Kurrachee, vice Colonel G. C. Grant; Mr. H. F. Aston to be Judge and Sessions Judge of Tanna, vice Mr. Hosking, continuing to act as Judge and Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad; Mr. T. S. Hamilton to be a Third Grade Judge, vice Colonel Grant; and to be Judge and Sessions Judge of Hyderabad, vice Mr. Aston; Mr. G. McCorkell to be Assistant Judge in the Surat District for the Broach Collectorate, vice Mr. Hamilton, continuing to act as Judge and Sessions Judge; Kanara; Mr. E. H. Moscardi to be a First Grade Assistant Judge, vice Mr. McCorkell; Mr. F. C. O. Beaman to be a Second Grade Assistant Judge, vice Mr. Moscardi; and Mr. A. S. Moriarty to be a Third Grade Assistant Judge, vice Mr. Beaman.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, AND PUNJAB.

(April 9.)

SURGEON-GENERAL W. A. THOMPSON proceeds immediately on three months' leave.

MR. R. BROOKE, Director-General of Telegraphs, has returned to Simla from leave.

DR. HOOPER, Civil Surgeon, Benares, goes to Lucknow on May 1st to officiate for six months as Deputy Surgeon-General.

THE Hon. Mr. Peacock, who shortly vacates his seat on the Bengal Board of Revenue, preparatory to his retirement from the service, was to be entertained at a farewell dinner in the Calcutta Town Hall on Thursday.

THE Government of India has requested the Punjab Government to grant a jagir of 350 acres of land on the banks of the river Nair to Sirdar Hurree Singh, of Sealkote, for his meritorious services in saving the lives of some British officers, children, &c., during the Sepoy Mutiny of 1857.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

"Would India Gain by the Extinction of European Government?" is a question asked by Mr. R. N. Cust, which may be taken as a satisfactory answer to the futilities uttered by Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji at Clerkenwell. Mr. Cust's personal knowledge of India dates from 1840, when he first arrived in the Punjab, where, and in the North-West Provinces, he served for a quarter of a century under the immediate supervision and friendly guidance of John Lawrence. His lengthened experience has taught him that India is not yet in a condition to govern herself, whatever may happen in the fulness of time. Were Home Rule, for instance, to be introduced it would not be for the benefit of the Bengalis, who would be trampled under foot by the more virile races of Upper India. The populations of Madras and Bombay have become equally feeble and unwarlike. The Mohammedans would be the first in the field, and would make short work of the Lower Provinces, Southern India, and possibly of Oudh, and the North-West Provinces. With the Rajputs, Maharrattas, and Sikhs, they would not wantonly interfere; but in all probability the hour and opportunity would produce a robber chieftain of the old Indian type—bold, cruel, and unscrupulous, who would reduce his immediate neighbours to subjection, and found a new dynasty of brief duration. But while these internal commotions were going on, trade, industry and commerce would come to an end. Roads and railways would fall out of repair, factories and plantations would perish through want of confidence and capital, European intelligence and adventure would be driven out of the land, and ports and harbours would be deserted by foreign shipping. What, then, would Home Rule avail? The National Congress men at least would have nothing out of the universal scramble, and would have to content themselves with the crusts thrown to them by their conquerors.

A more startling paper is that contributed by Colonel Mark Bell, V.C., A.D.C., who proves only too clearly that when the late Marquis Tseng boasted of the "awakening" of China he was simply indulging in unmitigated bounce. As a fact, for all aggressive purposes the "Middle Kingdom" has never been in a more contemptible condition than at present. It possesses no army worthy of the name. The majority of the troops are armed with old-fashioned weapons, such as bows and arrows, spears, swords, bucklers, and terrific banners. No idea of mobilisation exists anywhere, while the coast and frontier defences are utterly despicable. An invading enemy would find no more formidable obstructions than the great distances to be traversed and the irregular supply of provisions, especially in Mongolia and Manchuria. As an ally the Celestial Empire is worthless; as an enemy it is only to be laughed at.

For the sake of peace and conciliation, a writer, whose initials appear to be "E. G. B.," has taken in hand to remodel the map of the civilised world. To the United States he proposes to cede British Honduras in exchange for Alaska. To France he will give Gambia and Doménica in return for St. Pierre, Miquelon, New Caledonia and the Loyalty Islands. Germany shall have Nevis, Waltech Bay and Heligoland if she will only give up her portion of New Guinea and her East African empire. Holland, again, is to be made happy with Demerara, or British Guiana, as an equivalent for Borneo and her territory in New Guinea. To get rid of the Portuguese on the Eastern Coast of Africa, meaning Mozambique, Delagoa Bay, the Transvaal Railway and the Zambesi, they are to be presented with the Gold Coast and Lagos, two promising possessions of far greater intrinsic value. Altogether this paper is a fine illustration of its heading, "Co ut Des."

Another contributor, who modestly remains anonymous, is good enough to advise British capitalists how to invest their money in India and other Asiatic countries. It is at least a thoughtful and well-written article, and it is generally safe to speculate with other people's resources. The two papers, however, which are most likely to interest the general reader, are Mr. Talboys Wheeler's rechauffé of "Tavernier's Travels in India" and Sir George Birdwood's learned and most readable paper on the "Lepers in India"—a painful subject, handled with admirable taste and ability.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS OF INDIA.

A meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held on Wednesday, April 23, under the auspices of the East India Association, at Westminster Town Hall—Sir George Birdwood, K.C.I.E., in the chair—the subject for consideration being, "Is the Preservation of the old Industrial Arts of India possible?" introduced in an elaborate address by Mr. C. Purdon Clarke, C.I.E. Mr. Clarke expressed the opinion that all that is truly Hindu in the ornamental arts of India will be preserved only so long as the Hindu religion endures, and therefore if we find rapid decay in any branch of the Indian art, it is either a sign of the weakening of the Hindu religion, or a proof that the art in question is alien and withering through severance from its parent stock. It is to this that the whole of the manifest decay we so greatly deplore can be attributed, as it is the sumptuary arts, which do not find a place in the village system of India, that are now passing away under our eyes. To the Moghul invaders we owe the bulk of the India art wares which have done so much to make India famous; and in the fulness of the Moghul power we find the best condition of affairs for such arts to flourish. The great period of Indian art began with the Emperor Akbar in the sixteenth century, when all over the world the encouragement of ornamental art seemed to be considered an essential part of a monarch's duty—an age which did more to fill the present art museums than the earlier great art periods of antiquity, or the attempted Renaissance. In the nineteenth century Arts have suffered and been replaced by the Sciences, and, seeing that the quality of the supply can never rise above that of the demand, Mr. Purdon Clarke concluded that it was useless to expect in an age which tolerates advertising hoardings and makes silk hats compulsory, the arts of a bygone time, when things were made beautiful, ad majorem Dei gloriam, by people who knew not vulgarity.

Sir George Birdwood, in a long and elaborate address, strongly contested Mr. Clarke's ascription of Hindoo art to the influence of the Moghuls. He showed by contemporary testimony that the arts of the Hindoos are of the highest antiquity, and he insisted that they still remain in all their essential characteristics that they have always been from the earliest records of 2,000 or 3,000 years ago. The Mahomedan conquest of India had its influence on the arts of the country, but it nowhere destroyed the distinctive Hindoo character, nor in the slightest degree affected them beyond the limits over which it extended. The arts of Western India have been very little modified by it, and those of Southern India not at all. The industrial arts of India, as described in the temples, and indicated by the monuments of Mesopotamia and Egypt, the Bible, Homer, the Code of Manu, the Ramayana, and the Mahabharata, remained absolutely unchanged until they were revolutionised by the introduction of steam weaving in England.

Dr. Leitner supported the Chairman's views as to the extreme antiquity and originality of the arts of India, and lamented that the introduction of occidental forms, ideals, and methods were exerting a degrading influence on the industrial arts in many branches.

A PETITION has been addressed to the Bombay Government against the enforced use of English in the preparation of manifests and shipping bills for country vessels engaged in the coasting trade within the limits of the Bombay Presidency. The petitioners say that there is really no necessity for making out the documents in question in English, when both the consignors and consignees of goods, and the custom officials with whom they have to deal, are all natives.

THE Bengal National Chamber of Commerce have memorialised the Bengal Government against a curtailment of the Doorga Poojah holidays. They say the curtailment of the allotted number of Poojah holidays now granted under the Act would not only be a source of serious dissatisfaction to Hindus in general, whether in Calcutta or the Mofussil, but would inflict great hardships upon a very large number of Hindu employes and their families and relatives; while the solution proposed by the Lieutenant-Governor, though it may satisfy the requirements of trade, would be regarded as a new departure from the principle of religious neutrality hitherto observed by Government in its relations with the subject races, and as such would give rise to serious heart-burning.

THE ENGLISH SOLDIER IN INDIA.

WHATEVER grievances as regards present position and future prospects may be felt amongst the commissioned ranks of the British army, there can be no doubt about the good which the changes of late years have wrought in the position and prospects of the common soldier. The military reformers have in many instances done only injury and injustice to the former class, but the evil they have wrought has not extended to the rank and file. Officers, especially the senior ones, both on the retired and active list complain, the former, in many instances, of faith not having been kept with them in accordance with the contract under which they understood that they had accepted service under the Queen; and the latter of the uncertainty of their position as regards promotion and pension. For the decision of the Court in the case of Mitchell v. Regina, to the effect that no officer holding a commission in Her Majesty's army has any rights whatever, certainly startled the service, from subaltern to, we may say, Field-Marshal. And the consternation has not subsided yet. Brave, loyal, ready to do their duty under any condition of time, place and circumstance, the officers of to-day accept and hold by the honourable traditions of their predecessors; and although one of Her Majesty's judges has laid it down as a solemn dictum that that they have no rights, and can claim no breaches of contract, the astounding and sorrowful announcement will not prevent duty being as nobly and as conscientiously done as of yore. But this fact does not do away with another fact, viz., that throughout the commissioned ranks there is a feeling of anxiety amounting almost to distrust as regards the position in which all are placed by this decision. For if a Royal Warrant, on the faith of which men accept certain conditions affecting their present position and future arrangements, can be cancelled without notice or compensation to those who have so accepted its provisions, it needs no argument to show that "uncertainty" must be felt, and where "uncertainty" comes in "distrust" soon follows. Hence the grievances which are being written and talked about in the commissioned ranks. Lord Wolseley, at the Civil Service dinner the other evening, was complaisant enough to say that it was a good thing now and then to have a grievance. The misfortune, however, so far as the officers of the army, who are at the mercy of the civilian clerks of the War Office, are concerned, the grievance is not "now and then," but, apparently, continual. Fortunately the "uncertainty," "distrust," and, we might say, "discontent," is confined to officers and gentlemen who hold Her Majesty's commission, and has not permeated to the lower ranks of the army.

And, fortunately, there is no likelihood of its doing so, for the non-commissioned officer and private soldier of the English army to-day hold a position which is in bright and happy contrast to that which their predecessors held even five-and-twenty years ago. Everything which the authorities can do to make the individual soldier contented and cheerful with his voluntary servitude is being done, with the exception, perhaps, of carrying out Lord Wolseley's suggestion of adding sixpence a day to his pay. But that may be done, too, when the Radicals come into power and display their liberality. In India more especially the lot of the English soldier is one which shows to advantage—the efforts which have been made by the Government in the way of mental, moral and material improvement of the "military machine." But the soldier is no longer treated there as a mere machine. He is allowed to think and act greatly for himself. Besides the liberty and indulgences which he now enjoys in camp or cantonments there, the authorities have wisely permitted the grant of furlough to England to a certain number of well-behaved men. This is a marvellous innovation upon the "custom" of olden days, and is a revolution against the spirit of red-tapeism terrible enough to make some of the bygone generals of old turn in their honoured graves and swear. But it was a good movement.

on the part of the authorities, and was calculated to do much not only in the direction of making Indian service popular with the ranks, but of keeping in those ranks good and experienced non-commissioned officers. It is, therefore, with regret that we learn that a change has come over the liberal spirit of the authorities lately, and that this grant of furlough to England is in future to be rigidly restricted to very special and unexceptional cases. It is said that the Secretary of State has recently commented on the increase in the number of non-commissioned officers allowed to proceed to England last year, whereby some extra expenditure was incurred on account of passages. The rule was to give free passages home and back in the troopships, but it so happened that the last ship of the season from Bombay had no room for a few time-expired men, and these were sent home by a private vessel. For this terrible addition to the country's burdens the favour of furlough is to be "rigidly restricted." We can hardly believe that the India Office can be capable of such foolish, because false, economy. For we agree with the Civil and Military Gazette that "it is beyond doubt that the grant of a furlough to England with a free passage in a troopship both ways is the most powerful inducement that can be offered to soldiers of good character and lengthened Indian experience to re-engage." These are the very kind of soldiers we want in India. We hope that the reported "rigorous restriction" of furlough has been ordered by "mistake" somewhere.

THE charges brought against the Indian Commissariat Department of having supplied bad stores to the Chin Field Force must be supported by very strong evidence before they can be accepted as true. A correspondent, who seems for two months to have had exceptional opportunities of practically testing the quality of the tinned meat and biscuits served out to the troops, states that these stores were excellent, and that there could be no just grounds of complaint. There were bad tins of beef and mutton, as there must always be when large quantities are issued, but these were always willingly changed by the Commissariat. "There was never," he writes, "any difficulty about getting fresh rations in exchange for any found inferior." The statement published in a Rangoon paper that some of the stores issued were purchased so far back as 1877, judging by the marks on the tins, is certainly a remarkable one, but investigation will probably show that a mistake of ten years has been made in the date.

THE Indian Planters' Gazette reports that one of the most successful pig-sticks Tirhoot has seen for many a day took place on the 25th March at Mr. G. Richardson's factory at Bhicanpore, near Muzufferpore. Messrs. R. Hudson, F. Barclay, H. Collingridge and Captain Carandini, accompanied by four ladies and some other gentlemen, were out, the ladies riding all day, "and enjoying the sport immensely." The beat commenced at eight o'clock, and by 10 A.M., eight fine boars had fallen victims, and two had got away badly wounded. In the afternoon six more were accounted for and one escaped, all fully up to the average height, and one or two very large specimens.

ARRIVAL OF LORD HARRIS AT BOMBAY.

The new Governor, the Right Honourable Lord Harris, has arrived. Exactly at a quarter to six o'clock last evening, (April 10) the hour appointed for the landing, he stepped ashore at the Apollo Bunder. The arrangements made for his arrival and reception were perfect, and could not have been better carried out. It was expected that H.M.L.M.S. Tenasserim, bringing his lordship from Aden, would arrive in harbour some time in the afternoon, and so the vessel did. Indeed, the Tenasserim came within sight of land early in the morning, and reached the entrance to the harbour about 7 A.M., but there she lay till the afternoon, when she steamed into port, and cast anchor opposite the Apollo Bunder, the news reaching Bombay early in the day that the Tenasserim had been signalled, and was lying outside. All day groups of Natives assembled on the Bunder waiting for the vessel to put in an appearance, and eagerly scanning the horizon through glasses for the approaching vessel. Then about three o'clock, when the Tenasserim was sighted entering the harbour, the news seemed to fly through the air like wildfire, for soon large crowds flocked down to the Bunder head to welcome the new Governor to Bombay. The harbour at this time presented a gay appearance, all the ships riding at anchor being dressed, from stem to stern, in brightly coloured flags, while on shore Mr. Murzban seemed to have put forth a special effort to make the shamiana for the accommodation of officials and their friends look attractive with white and maroon drapings inside and flags without. Shortly after three the firing of two guns from the land battery gave warning that the Tenasserim was nearing her anchorage, and at half-past three the vessel passed the Boadicea, from whose sides burst forth a welcome of seventeen guns. About five o'clock the shamiana began to fill, and at the Bunder head there assembled a large number of gentlemen representing the heads of all Civil, Naval, and Military Departments, the consular representatives of foreign Governments, and others.

At twenty minutes past five a deputation, consisting of Mr. J. Nugent, Chief Secretary to Government, Colonel Lyttleton, Military Secretary to H.E. the Governor, Captain Forbes and Captain Jervise to aide-de-camps the Governor, and Captain Hext, left the Bunder in the Government steam launch Bee, and proceeded to the Tenasserim to give welcome to the Governor-elect, and bring him ashore. They did not remain long on board, for about twenty minutes to six the launch was observed to leave the side of the large vessel, whereupon the flag-ship Boadicea fired a salute of seventeen guns. The little vessel steamed rapidly towards the shore, and as she drew near the steps a loud cheer was raised by the crowd lining the Bunder walls, which enthusiastic welcome Lord Harris acknowledged by rising to his feet and doffing his hat. As he stepped ashore another salute of seventeen guns was fired from the land battery. Mr. Nugent introduced to his lordship Sir Raymond West, the Hon. Mr. J. G. Moore, and other members of Council, Chief Justice Sir Charles Sargent, General Budgen, commanding Bombay District, and the other gentlemen assembled at the Bunder head to welcome his lordship to Bombay. With them Lord Harris cordially shook hands, after which he was conducted to that portion of the shamiana where were assembled members of the Municipal Corporation.

There Mr. Grattan Geary, the president, read an address of welcome, to which his Lordship gave a genial reply.

Lord Harris and suite arrived at Government House at 6.50 P.M. His Excellency was received by Lord and Lady Reay on the steps, and after greeting each other cordially Lord Harris, accompanied by Colonel Lyttleton and Colonel Ranks, inspected the Guard of Honour, which was composed of 100 rank and file of H.M.'s 21st Regiment N.I., under the command of a Native officer. The Guard of Honour was then dismissed and His Excellency Lord Harris retired into Government House.

GENERAL PARROTT.

(Pioneer.)

Certainly no graver blow has been borne by the Indian Turf of late years than the one which we have now, to our great sorrow, to announce. General Parrott has thrown up the sponge in disgust, and sold his stud to Government, so that no more of the magnificent B. P. youngsters, who have shown such excellent sport during the last ten years, will be available to the racing public. The chief reason for the grand old General's finally resolving to close his stud was the formation of the Government rearing dépôt close up to his stables, an action which naturally hampered and handicapped private enterprise terribly, for not only were risks of sickness rendered much greater than formerly, but prices, for both grain and labour being almost doubled, turned what was at first a pleasurable and comparatively inexpensive hobby into a positively losing speculation. While we sincerely hope that the Government action, which has closed General Parrott's Kurnal stud, may be attributed to necessity, yet we trust that the General's successful career as a breeder will have taught the present stud officers a certain amount of useful knowledge. Wherever one goes now in India among the handsomest hacks, chargers and race horses, General Parrott's youngsters not only show out prominently, but are easily sought after. If at any time any have remained on the breeder's hands it has been solely because he has been far too sensitive himself to dispose of them, if they had ever so slight a blemish. Instance after instance has come to our knowledge where General Parrott has deliberately refused to accept the selection of a would-be purchaser, choosing from the advertised lists merely because he thought the youngster marked down would be less likely to turn out a flyer than others in the paddock. From the day that General Parrott started the Kurnal Stud not a single man in India lives who can say that he has ever been deceived, or has brought a bad B. P. This is something to be proud of. The writer can speak with a very large amount of authority, for over thirty of the Kurnal B. P. stock have been at different times part and parcel of the Jaintpore stable, and, with not a single exception, they have all been flyers, which in bone, size, and looks were infinitely superior to any Australian priced at the figure they were purchased at, viz., Rs. 1,000 each; moreover, thirty-six winners on the Indian Turf have been born of the now fashionable B. P. brand. We fear much that the destruction of his pet idea will lose to India an officer whose career has been, though in every way laudable and creditable to him, in reality disappointing and thankless, purely because, being honest enough to have the courage of his convictions, he refused to acquiesce in one of the gravest errors ever perpetrated by our Government—the closing of the old Government studs. Should General Parrott leave India, a country to which he is thoroughly wedded, we shall hold it to be little less than a public calamity. His life out here, from start to finish, has indeed been that of a Bayard sans peur et sans reproche. As an active soldier in his younger days he was noted for everything that made an officer popular and loved. Brave as a lion and gentle as a woman, his men would have followed him anywhere; and afterwards, when his love for the noblest animal God ever created, the horse, led him to accept a stud appointment, he was as much revered by those he was brought in contact with, as he had been by the men who in former days would have followed him up to the cannon's mouth. We have frequently been witness of the kind and genial hospitality shown by him when camping out at the many Central India horse fairs. No respecter of persons was dear old Ben Parrott. At his well supplied mess-table the swellest officials found themselves rubbing shoulders with the hard-working and half-starved German missionary; as long as he was an honest man no European in camp ever wanted a meal while Ben Parrott was there. A true Christian, fair alike in his dealing with Native and European, a perfect husband, father, and friend. India, in saying adieu to General Parrott, will have lost one of the very best of the Queen's good bargains. But we yet hope that the Government will not be so blind as to let the most experienced officer in horse-breeding operations leave India without endeavouring to induce him to remain.

In his recent shooting expedition, the biggest tiger bagged by the Maharajah of Cuch Behar and party measured 10ft. 2½ inches, and the biggest tigress 9 feet 2½ inches. They almost beat the record. It was a shot from the Maharajah that brought the tigress down.

NON-REPRESENTATION BETTER THAN MIS-REPRESENTATION. —Rajah Sir T. Madhava Row writes:—"This capital principle should not be overlooked in reconstituting the Indian Councils. One example will suffice to make the principle plain. The great majority of the people who retain their religious beliefs and social usages would decidedly prefer their non-representation, to their mis-representation by those who have given up those beliefs and those usages. Observe, think and judge."

THE Mansion House Committee of the fund for providing a memorial in London of the late Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala have commissioned Sir Edgar Boehm, R.A., to erect a replica in bronze (but without the hat) of the Calcutta equestrian statue of that distinguished soldier. The committee are also in communication with the Office of Woods and Forests as to obtaining a site for the statue in Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, between the Guards' Statue and the Duke of York's Column.

A MOHAMEDAN mission to convert the Americans is rather a startling project. But this is what Moulvi Hassan Ali is proposing to large crowds at Haidarabad, and the Faithful are actually responding with subscriptions to defray the Moulvi's expenses. No doubt it is Mormonism that has turned the attention of the Moslems to the Far West.

ELECTIVE PRINCIPLE FOR INDIA.

The following is a copy of a Memorial which is being sent for signature throughout England against granting the Elective Principle to India, as prayed for by the Congress. The Memorial has been submitted to eminent Counsel and approved, and has the promised support of several M.P.'s and others who have a practical knowledge of the Indian peoples and their interests:—

TO THE HONOURABLE THE COMMONS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED.

The Memorial of the Undersigned Inhabitants of Showeth,—

That your memorialists are persons who are greatly interested in the prosperity and welfare of Her Imperial Majesty's Indian dominions, and the inhabitants thereof generally.

2. That they desire to bring to the notice of this Honourable House that a certain section of the Inhabitants of India, led first by one and now by two retired Anglo-Indian Covenanted officials, have established a so-called Indian National Congress, and have propounded views regarding the future administration of India, which, in the opinion of your Memorialists, if given effect to in the present state of India, will unsettle the peaceful Government and established order of things, and cause great injury to your memorialists.

3. That the agitation set on foot by these persons, hitherto confined to India, is now, owing to the support afforded them by certain Radical Members of Parliament, being extended to this country.

4. That the most dangerous part of this agitation in your memorialists' opinion is that which aims at introducing into India without proper safeguards the elective principle of representation.

5. Your memorialists desire to point out that the numerical superiority of Hindoos as a whole would, if the elective principle were to be recognised in India, most certainly lead to such an assertion of their ascendancy as the more warlike races in India would not peacefully submit to.

6. That the so-called Indian National Congress, as a mere annual debating club in India, might well be looked upon as harmless in India, where the more substantial and thoughtful of the people are acquainted with its origin, its members, and its mode of action; but since the agitation is being extended to this country, and the present peaceful form of administration denounced before audiences composed of those who are for the most part uneducated, and possess but slight, if any, knowledge of India and its diverse population, there is reason to fear that the error and misrepresentation needful to keep alive such agitation will lead to the most disastrous consequences.

7. That as the first outcome of this agitation there is at the present moment a Bill before your Honourable House to amend the Indian Councils, and constituting them on a partially elective basis.

8. Your memorialists desire to bring more particularly to your Honourable House's notice some of the more important of the objections they have to the so-called Indian National Congress, at whose instance it is asserted the said Bill has been presented to Parliament, which are as follows:—

- (1.) The so-called Indian National Congress is in no sense national, and cannot be truthfully termed Indian, inasmuch as a majority of the inhabitants of India, more especially Mohamedans, who form one-third of the population of Bengal, the Sikhs, the Mahrattas, the Parsees and Anglo-Indians are strongly opposed to it.
- (2.) That it has been conceived by a body of men without substantial means, who are clamouring for notoriety at the expense of the uneducated masses.
- (3.) That the election of the so-called delegates of such Congress can be only correctly characterised as a pure farce, the practice being in most cities and districts to issue at a few hours' notice a circular in English calling a public meeting, pass resolutions already prepared, and, as delegates, elect anyone who desires to be such, large numbers of the inhabitants having no knowledge of, and refusing to take part in, such meetings.
- (4.) That many of the doctrines laid down in the resolutions of the said so-called Congress are subversive of peaceful government in India.
- (5.) That the aristocracy of India, including the representatives of wealth and high education, hold aloof from it.
- (6.) That the system of election proposed in the said Bill will virtually ignore the large and important interests of every community in India other than the Hindoos, and to give the Hindoos representatives in proportion to their numbers would result in the gravest mischief.
- (7.) That so long as the Indian people are divergent in their religion, customs, and character, that a satisfactory electorate would be unobtainable, so long in your memorialists' opinion must it be the duty of the governing authority to withhold its sanction to any scheme of representation founded on election.

9. Your memorialists are desirous that Her Majesty's Indian subjects, in terms of Her Gracious Proclamation of November, 1858, should have, "as far as may be," all the rights and benefits of British subjects, and they are strongly of opinion that the great landowners, the men of high birth, and the natural leaders of the people should be the first upon whom the franchise should be conferred, and that the differences of religion, nationality, and character, which prevail among this portion of the Indian community, are such that the momentous change in the administration which is implied in the right of electing representatives in the Indian Supreme and Provincial Councils should not be made.

Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that this Honourable House will, until further advised, refuse its assent to the Bill, commonly called Mr. Bradlaugh's Indian Councils Bill, as also any measure having for its object the extension to the inhabitants of India in any form of the principle of elective representation.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

A RUSSIAN VIEW OF THE CONGRESS.

Probably no one but Sir E. Watkin believes that the Indian National Congress is propped with Russian gold; indeed, Mr. Hume's description of the finances is proof positive to the contrary. Nevertheless it is interesting to know what Russian opinion thinks of the agitation, and the subjoined article, translated from the Russki Invalid, is, we believe, the first criticism in the Russian Press that has appeared on the subject:—

"The British Government in the midst of the numerous internal questions with which it is faced cannot but be desirous of the speediest removal of all external difficulties (the dispute with Portugal regarding the Zambesi country, the constant soreness of feeling evinced by France with respect to Egypt, &c., &c.). Apart from the Separatist movement which is spreading from Ireland to Wales and Scotland, the Queen's Government is, we know, occupied with the question of the federation of the Australian Colonies, and it has of late been obliged to give increased attention to the affairs of India and to the meetings of the Native Congress in Calcutta and other centres. And certainly this Congress and the resolutions at which it has arrived are not devoid of meriting serious attention. Founded but five years ago this Native Congress has for its object the recognition of the political interests of the Native population at large, and the bringing of those interests to the notice of the British Government. The members of the Congress comprise Hindus, Parsees and Native Christians, and representatives of one or other of these classes have been entrusted by the mass of their co-religionists with the duty of making their rulers acquainted with needs of the lower classes of the population of India. This movement in favour of getting up a Native representative form of Government began, as we know, in that Liberal epoch in which Lord Ripon was the Viceroy of India. That nobleman encouraged the agitation in so far as it extended Native rights, and was directed to the opening of judicial appointments to Natives and English alike.

"As regards, however, the Mahomedan population of India, not only has it failed to evince any sympathy with the movement, but certain of its representatives, for example, those living in the Bombay Presidency, have even declared their hostility to this new idea. On the other hand certain English politicians, who do not recognise distinctions of race, have lent their aid in the development of the movement. Accordingly we find that at a late session the Native Congress voted a whole series of resolutions in which the wish was expressed that the Natives should have the right of selecting their own representatives, who should have a voice in the Imperial Council as well as in those provincial assemblies of which the members are at present nominated by the Supreme Government. Demands of this description have up till now been couched in very moderate language and in an amicable spirit, but in England it has already come to be recognised that the time is not remote when such demands will be put forward in a more decided and a sharper tone. The following circumstance will serve as an indication that this will be the case. During the session of the Congress there was present in the character of a tourist the famous member for Northampton, Mr. Bradlaugh. This gentleman was specially invited to attend the meetings of the Congress, and he was intrusted with the task of introducing into the English Parliament a Bill which will comprehend all the demands of the Native population of India."

THE publication of official documents in the vernacular is to be discontinued. The local Governments have asked to be relieved of an expense which has proved useless.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

BRIGADIER-GENERALS NAIRNE and SANFORD have left Bombay for Aden to inspect the fortifications, and more particularly to examine the new guns which have recently been placed in position for the defence of the harbour.

LIEUT. MERRIMAN, of the Marine Battalion, has died from dysentery in the European General Hospital, Calcutta. The deceased was formerly in the 4th King's Own. He was only recently married, and returned from two years' furlough in Europe last February.

COLONEL CARR, of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, died at Rawalpindi on the morning of the 29th ult. His war services were:—Afghan War, 1878-79-80. Capture of Piewar Kotai. Actions of Matoon and Charasiah. Operations at and around Kabul, Dec., 1879. Despatches (twice).—Medal with three clasps. Brevet of Major. Zhob Valley Expedition, 1884.

MAJOR GORDON-CUMMING, who was mortally wounded near Fort White on the 23rd, was buried there the next day with military honours, 200 Cheshires, deceased's regiment, forming the firing party. The Civil and Military Gazette writes:—"The name of Major Gordon-Cumming of the Cheshire Regiment will not require to be omitted from next year's Indian Army List Index, because it is one of several omissions which we have noticed in this year's list. If this had occurred in the list of the sister Service it would have given a new lease of life to the superstition which, many years ago, caused a number of Blue Jackets to try to desert rather than sail under the command of an officer whose name had accidentally been left out of the year's Navy List. Jack Tar could not be induced to believe that the accident had no sinister significance."

THE Madras Mail, alluding to the Madras Army, says:—"The martial spirit in the South is in no sense dead; and he who shall revive it by proper attention to the descendants of the peoples who established the British Empire in India will do his country enormous service. At the present time, it must be admitted, such an idea appears unfashionable. It is all the craze to recruit almost exclusively from amongst the tribes upon the north and north-western frontiers, and to condemn the entire loyal populations of the remainder of the Peninsula to military inefficiency. This appears to be foolish policy; and it is earnestly to be hoped that the day may never come when the 'military spirit of the southern races' shall indeed have been finally crushed, and the Indian Army have none, throughout the breadth of the land which has rung with its victories, to enthusiastically join its ranks."

BRIGADIER-GENERAL STEWART, in a farewell order to Colonel Fitzgerald, C.B., who has just vacated the command of the 3rd Hyderabad Cavalry, notices that his services with the Contingent extended uninterruptedly from 1862, and that he had commanded the 3rd Cavalry since 1883. General Stewart goes on to say:—"During his period of command Colonel Fitzgerald has ever displayed untiring zeal and energy, and has done his utmost to promote the interest and advancement of the officers and men of his regiment. The services of the 3rd Cavalry in Burma are well-known, and their present high state of efficiency is an example of what care and consideration will do in a Silladar regiment; it is proof of Colonel Fitzgerald's capacity as a commanding officer, and it worthily earns for him the entire satisfaction of the Brigadier-General, as well as the complimentary notice of the officers of superior authority who have inspected his regiment."

ARRIVAL OF H.M.'s TROOPSHIP EUPHRATES.

Her Majesty's troopship Euphrates, Commander John R. E. Pattison, arrived in harbour on Saturday evening, April 5th, bringing drafts of various regiments, also a crew for Her Majesty's Ship Sphinx. She left Portsmouth on the 9th ult., Malta on the 18th, Port Said on the 22nd, and Suez on the 24th. She brings 68 officers, 18 ladies, 2 children, 675 men, 44 women, and 27 children. During the voyage on the 1st instant she passed Her Majesty's troopship Crocodile, homeward bound, and passed on Saturday last the mail steamer Massilia, homeward bound. The Euphrates experienced fine weather throughout. She landed a draft of the Royal Irish Rifles at Suez for Cairo. The following is the list of the names of saloon passengers:—

The Enphrates leave on the 15th inst. for England.

EXTRACTS FROM AN UNPUBLISHED BLUE-BOOK.

(Pioneer.)

Within a thousand miles of P— was a store in which a large quantity of military clothing was kept pending emergencies, and to keep down the rats there was a cat for which a small subsistence allowance was drawn monthly. Retrenchment, however, was the order of the day, and the officer in charge was directed to indent for "traps, rats, wire, iron, galvanised, mark I." in the proportion of one to every 100 suits of clothing. In the next "Changes in War Materials" an elaborate picture and description of the above trap appeared, and the cat was declared to be obsolete, and was ordered to be handed over to the Commissariat Department to be sold.

The number of traps according to the above proportion was found to be 19'3, and accordingly twenty traps were demanded. The indent came back with one trap disallowed, but by way of consolation it was stated that "fractions of a trap exceeding '5 would be considered as a whole trap." Thereupon the officer in charge of the clothing store pointed out "that the odd 33 suits of clothing would be left at the mercy of the rats," but without avail. The nineteen traps duly arrived, and a return, Army Form X1063, was ordered to be submitted monthly.

The return in question was arranged in birdcage form and was a masterpiece of its kind, showing at a glance the amount of clothing in store, the cubic measurement of each room, the number of traps on charge, the number of rats caught each day. The rats were to be further classified as regards colour and size, and arranged in parallel columns. Mice were to be entered under the heading "Remarks." The percentage of rats caught to suits of clothing, and of rats to traps were to be marginally noted. Mice were to be included in the latter, but not in the former.

The officer in charge of the store acknowledged the receipt of the traps, and requested instructions as to how they were to be set. The reply came "that the matter had been under consideration, and instructions would shortly be published." The first monthly return showed several suits of clothing destroyed by rats. The authorities gave evidence of the energy they have always displayed, on an emergency and a very complete pamphlet was issued within a month.

The second return was like the first. "Were the instructions regarding setting of traps strictly adhered to?" "Yes. The clothing destroyed doubtless was part of that for which traps were disallowed," was the triumphant retort.

Another trap was allowed, but "it was in contemplation to make a corresponding increase to the clothing in store of 67 suits."

Third return showed rats caught nil, and more clothing destroyed. A mark II. trap was introduced, which differed from mark I. in that the wire was not galvanised, and the iron was obtained in Germany. No rats were caught, and the destruction of clothing continued.

"None but men of superior intelligence were to be permitted to touch the traps, and a warrant officer was to be struck off duty and detailed to instruct them, and a return was to be submitted monthly showing the number of men instructed."

The worthy who was selected for this important post elaborated a drill in accordance with the "spirit" of the "instructions," which, after various extension motions to develop the trap-setting muscles, commenced with "Take up traps," and ended with "Ease springs."

Badges in gold and in worsted of crossed rats' tails were authorised for men who attained a certain stage of proficiency. Still no rats were caught, and the destruction of clothing continued.

The return showing the number of men instructed was to be submitted in duplicate once a week.

No improvement.

The authorities were compelled to admit that the traps had not answered their expectations, and that there appeared to be no fault either in the traps themselves or the setting, and inquired incidentally what bait was used.

The officer in charge of the clothing store pointed out that no allowance was made for bait in the regulations, and that he could not be expected to provide it out of his own pocket.

The rats are still enjoying themselves on the clothing.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 5, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th April; and from Calcutta to the 15th April.

H.E. THE VICEROY visited Mussoorie on April 14th, and left for Chakrata and Simla the next day.

H.E. THE Viceroy was expected to arrive at Simla for the season on April 27th.

LORD AND LADY REAY left Bombay in the P. and O. s.s. Oriental for England on Saturday evening, April 12th.

H.E. LORD HARRIS entertained the heads of departments and Foreign Consuls to dinner at Malabar Point on April 12th, with the object of making their acquaintance.

TEN thousand Mahomedans in the North-West Provinces and the Punjab have signed a memorial against the introduction of the elective system in India.

INFLUENZA still continues to spread in the mofussil of the North-West Provinces, and is interfering seriously with business.

SEVERAL hundreds of convicts in the Bengal Jail have been attacked with influenza.

CHOLERA has broken out in Allahabad.

THE Amir of Afghanistan is still at Balkh, and apparently has no intention of moving for the present.

Two destructive mill fires have occurred at Colaba, one resulting in damage to the extent of ~~between seven and eight lakhs~~, and the other a lakh and a-half.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN is journeying through Kumaun, inquiring into the scarcity of water, which has now reached a critical point.

MR. DERRY, the contractor for Bellary Kistna Railway, claims eight lakhs of damages against the Secretary of State for alleged breach of contract.

FORT ALJAL, in the Northern Lushai Country, is to be garrisoned by two hundred police, a reserve of a hundred men being stationed at Changsil.

SIR HENRY HARRISON took his farewell of the Calcutta Corporation on April 14, an all but unanimous vote acknowledging the great services he had rendered as Chairman being passed by the Commissioners. It was further resolved that the salary of Mr. H. Lee, the new Chairman, should for the present be Rs. 2,500, the minimum which can be given under the Municipal Act.

MR. JAMES KENNEDY and Mr. W. T. Church are permitted to retire from the Bengal Civil Service.

THE appointment of Consulting Engineer for Railways at Madras is still vacant, Major Coaker, to whom it was offered, being unable to leave England owing to illness. Colonel K. A. Jopp, Deputy Consulting Engineer, will probably officiate until Major Coaker's return to duty in November.

THE memorial to Parliament from the Mahomedans, protesting against the elective system being introduced into India, has already been signed by over ten thousand persons. Only those who can write are eligible to sign, while Government servants are excluded from doing so.

REPORTS from nearly all parts of India show that the influenza epidemic is spreading. In the Himalaya districts it is particularly prevalent; at Almora the Commander-in-Chief found over 30 per cent. of the 3rd Gurkhas in hospital from the complaint. The ailment is also spreading in the mofussil districts of the North-West Provinces, and threatens to interfere seriously with an important branch of State business. At this season of the year the cultivators of opium flock to the weighment places in great numbers, and any delay in taking delivery of the drug from them paying and dismissing them causes a serious block. At headquarters at Ghazipur half the factory staff, both European and Native, have been incapacitated by influenza; while at Azimgarh, Basti, and Lucknow (Unao) weighments had to be temporarily stopped, owing to the illness of the officers in charge. The cultivators themselves have been attacked by influenza in several districts.

THE new road connecting the Chittagong Hill Tracts with Upper Burma was completed on April 13th, on which day General Tregear arrived at Haka. It is so far a mule track 232 miles in length, from Demagiri to Kan, and the engineers will have to decide next season whether the present alignment shall be that of the future Bengal-Burma high-road. On some of the sections the gradients are severe, but these can hereafter be made considerably easier.

THE water famine at Simla is creating great alarm. All the hill springs have dried up.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces is convinced that relief works are required, as the Garnwal-Kumaon crops have failed to a considerable extent.

THE Nizam's Government has decided to establish a public library at Hyderabad in aid of a movement for translating useful English books into Urdu.

THE authorities of Bagdad are improving the navigation of the Tigris and Euphrates.

LIEUTENANT JERVIS, Adjutant 2nd Bengal Infantry, stationed at Alipur, has been killed by a fall from his horse.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These Shares on Saturday were an improvement of 1-16 in Mysore Shares, with a decline of 1-16 in Nundydroog and Ooregum. Mysore Shares were last quoted 67-19 to 69-16 x new, Nundydroog 2½ to 2½, Indian Consolidated 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 10s. to 10s. 6d., Ooregum Ordinary 2½ to 2½, ditto Preference 2 to 2½, Devala-Moyar 2s. 9d. to 3s. 3d., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 6s. to 6s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 10s. 9d. to 11s. 3d., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., South-east Mysore 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 1s. to 1s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 14s. 6d. to 15s., New South-east Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

LEVICO.—Anglo-Indians who have suffered from the debilitating effects of climate and overwork, and are seeking for some restorative process to recruit wasting energies, will find a remedy at hand in Nature's potent medicine Levico, a natural mineral water from the South of the Tyrol, rich in arsenious acid and iron, in the form in which they are most easily assimilated. The water takes its name from the small town of Levico, now a fashionable Alpine-health resort, at the foot of the Monte-Fronte hills, well known for its celebrated Thermal Establishments, at 4,500 feet above the sea level. There are two distinct springs; from the one is bottled the Levico mild, and from the other richer in arsenious acid and iron is obtained the Levico strong. The water in each is clear, colourless, scentless, and pure, and has an agreeable flavour. It is employed with the greatest benefit in all diseases which owe their origin to an unhealthy state of the blood—anaemia, ague, jungle and malarial fever, &c., &c., and has been found most efficacious as a nervous sedative. It is spoken of highly by the faculty in England and on the Continent.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 4.

The Native Congress newspapers are daily publishing telegraphic accounts from all parts of India of meetings held to condemn Lord Cross's Councils Bill and to support Mr. Bradlaugh's measure. The remarkable similarity between these meetings in the matter of language and resolutions would suffice to show, even if other evidence were wanting, that the agitation is got up by a small body of wirepullers at headquarters. Monster petitions to Parliament are also being prepared. The agitators are not very scrupulous in their methods of obtaining signatures. The Pioneer publishes a translation of a vernacular handbill circulated in Upper India stating that the objects of the petition are to procure the remission of taxation, the advancement of Hindostan, and the strengthening of the English Government. Not a word is said about election, and the ignorant classes are left to suppose that they are only praying for a reduction of taxation. The more moderate Hindoo newspapers show no sympathy with this movement, and urge that Lord Cross's Bill should be given a fair trial.

The Mahomedan counter-agitation gains strength daily, and the petition of their Patriotic Association now numbers nearly 27,000 signatures.

The Bengal Government have published a selection of papers on the subject of the recent disturbances among the Kol aboriginal tribes inhabiting Chotah Nagpore. There appears to be a strong spirit of antagonism between landlords and tenants, due in great measure to the fact that the landlords have been extracting from 60 to 80 days' work yearly from the tenants instead of the 14 as sanctioned by custom. The tenants on the other hand, while resisting illegal exactions, frequently refuse to pay just dues. For the moment things are quiet and the Lieutenant-Governor has decided to despatch a special magistrate to the disturbed tracts and to take other steps to try to prevent a recurrence of disorder. It is a remarkable fact that lately there has been a great movement among the Kols towards Christianity, over 40,000 having joined the Roman Catholic Church, but some doubts have been thrown on the genuineness of these conversions.

The income-tax authorities of Calcutta are allowing their zeal to outrun their discretion in a manner likely to revive public feeling against that most unpopular impost. I mentioned last week that the Chamber of Commerce had protested against an attempt to levy a tax upon the profits of English consignors of goods to India. Before that question has been settled the collector has aroused a fresh outburst of indignation by issuing a circular to the banks requiring them to give a list of the customers whose money they hold on fixed deposit. The banks have refused to comply, on the ground that they are not justified in disclosing their customers' affairs. These arbitrary inquisitorial measures are condemned by all classes.

The military department have been again considering the question of recruiting among the Afridis, the most powerful and warlike tribe on the north-west frontier. During the Afghan war a number of desertions occurred among the Afridi Sepoys, which caused their enlistment to be forbidden. Since that time they have come more under the influence of the British Government, and have done good service in preserving order in the Khyber. Accordingly orders have been issued for the utilisation of the splendid material they offer for the formation of new Afridi companies in certain selected regiments, namely, the 21st, 24th, and 26th Punjab Infantry, and the 4th and 5th Regiments of the Punjab Frontier force.

Rain has fallen plentifully throughout the greater part of Northern India during the past fortnight, and harvest prospects have greatly improved. Some scarcity may be felt in Kumaon and Garhwal, but there is no longer any danger of serious distress.

A remarkable fraud was perpetrated on the Bank of Bengal last week. A Jew, named Solomon, succeeded in procuring advances amounting to 11 lakhs of rupees on the security of opium certificates, that is, certificates issued by the Board of Revenue stating that the holder had purchased so many chests of opium and was entitled to delivery on payment of a certain sum. The certificates in question turned out to be forged. Solomon has been arrested and is now being prosecuted by the Government for forging public documents. The money has not yet been recovered.

Mr. Ney Elias has returned from Siam and has gone to Simla, where he is engaged in writing a report of the proceedings of the Boundary Commission.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 3.

From Arracan it is reported that the police have had a successful encounter with the rebel band under Shwethin.

The Mandalay Herald calls attention to the absurdly extravagant staff of the Burma police force at headquarters, and especially to the number of useless but well-paid officers who are employed as personal assistants to the higher functionaries, who have themselves but little to do. A reform certainly appears to be needed, especially as a large section of the force is being formed into regular regiments and placed under the control of the military authorities.

From the Ruby Mines it is reported that a large ruby weighing 304 carats has been found.

Moulmein, once one of the most prosperous commercial ports in the Indian Empire, is falling into a state of great decay. Loud complaints are made by its merchants and mill-owners of the action of the local Government in recently imposing a tax of 7 per cent. ad valorem on all timber coming down the Salwen to Moulmein. This new tax has gravely aggravated the condition of affairs. It is urged that the imposition of the tax now is singularly injudicious, as all the forests along the Salwen are becoming exhausted, and all the timber near the creeks has been felled.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

RANGOON, MAY 3.

Brigadier-General Symons has left Haka, and the Chin-Lushai Expedition is at an end. Although no resistance was experienced, the spirit and endurance of the troops were severely tested by the fatigues and exposure they underwent. The extraordinary prevalence of sickness amongst the troops has never been satisfactorily explained. Brigadier-General Symons throughout the expedition displayed great zeal and energy in providing for the comfort of the troops.

Profiting by the experience acquired in former years, Brigadier-General Symonds avoided many of the blunders which were committed in the expedition of last year. The expedition was essentially a sappers' expedition, and no officer contributed more to its success than Major Henry, commanding the Royal Engineers with the force. He displayed great skill in constructing roads with extraordinary rapidity in the difficult country through which the column advanced, and great tact in obtaining the maximum amount of work from the soldiers and labourers under his orders.

OBITUARY.

—O—

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the Hon. Colman Macaulay, C.I.E., Acting Chief Secretary of the Bengal Government, Financial Department, died suddenly on Friday evening. He had only returned from England the previous day. He succumbed to prostration due to excessive heat during the railway journey from Bombay to Calcutta. Mr. Macaulay, who was one of the most rising men in the Bengal Civil Service, was best known at home by his connection with the efforts to open Tibet to commerce and as the head of the mission which it was proposed to send to Lhasa some four years ago.

THE Rangoon correspondent telegraphs that great regret is felt throughout Burma at the death of Dr. Forchhammer, professor of Pali at Rangoon College. Dr. Forchhammer, who was a most learned Pali scholar, published the first completed edition of the Tripitaka or Buddhist canon and also some very valuable treatises on the sources and development of Buddhist law. He also did good service in rendering the Buddhist texts available in the four Courts in Burma. Dr. Forchhammer has left a large mass of papers, which it is hoped will be intrusted to some well-known Orientalist to arrange and publish.

A CASE of some importance in connection with the theft of Martini-Henri rifles was the other day tried by the District Judge of Lahore. The facts appear to be that a European employé of the railway lately out from Germany, and a volunteer in the 2nd Punjab Volunteer Rifle Corps, after squandering all his money on drink decided to raise money by the sale of the rifle. He sold it to a Pathan, a sepoy in a Native regiment at Mooltan, for Rs. 31. The sepoy managed to convey it unchallenged to Mooltan; but just about this time accused's conduct gave rise to suspicion, and the matter was brought to the Adjutant's notice, who instituted a search, but only found the bayonet with the accused. The police were on this communicated with, and succeeded in tracing the rifle to Mooltan. The accused, finding the game up, made a clean breast of it, and in consideration of this and the fact that he is a foreigner, was sentenced to a month's imprisonment. The prosecution of the sepoy for the part he took in the transaction is contemplated.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

TRANSFERS IN THE STAFF CORPS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

In our opinion, the chief reason for the failure in the existing system of officering the Native corps is, that each regiment has a separate list or establishment. If the regimental establishment were large, like that of a British regiment, it would be self-supporting; but being small, it cannot help being defective also. The present establishment is for cavalry nine, and for infantry eight officers. An allowance is made for officers on furlough or on temporary detached employ in the following manner. Every officer who leaves his regiment for a period of over six months causes a vacancy to which a probationer may be appointed. This, however, is inoperative in all cases where an officer is granted six months' leave only in the first instance, and then gradually obtains extensions of three and four months at a time. It is obvious that such a case would never fall under the head of absence with more than six months unexpired—although actually the officer may be away from his regiment for upwards of two years. The rule, therefore, that a probationer may be appointed to every vacancy of more than six months' duration does not act uniformly enough to be a real remedy, and the Government of India has more than once objected to amending it. Where we have only eight or nine officers with a regiment, the withdrawal of two or three is a decided inconvenience. Officers must have leave, and when they go for only six months no one replaces them, and the work falls on those that are left. The readiest way to stop this inconvenience is to increase the establishment to ten officers for infantry and eleven for cavalry. But as the Government of India will not see its way to do this, we must fall back on another remedy. If we could do away with the separate list for each regiment, and let the three linked regiments have one establishment, and keep two of the regiments up to strength by drawing on the third or dépôt regiment, the problem would be solved. One of the three regiments, in turn, could be selected as a dépôt regiment, and located in a safe centre where a reduced strength would be of no moment. The probationers could all be attached to the dépôt regiment, and as they pass into the Staff Corps, posted to the other two regiments for duty.

THE HINDOO LAW OF ADOPTION.

(Pioneer.)

The Full Bench of the N.W.P. High Court delivered an extremely lengthy and exhaustive judgment upon a point which is of the nearest interest to the Hindoo community. The value of the property in dispute in the particular case under decision was comparatively small, but the Court's unanimous decision will effectually govern a large number of distinct cases, affecting interests that might be measured by lakhs of rupees. The main point left to the decision of the full bench was whether an essential condition, precedent to the making of a valid adoption by a Hindoo widow, is an authority from her deceased husband to make it; and Mr. Justice Mahmood covered forty-five printed pages in his judgment on the matter, his investigation into every conceivable authority on the subject, both ancient and modern, being laborious in the extreme. The other judges contented themselves with agreeing with the conclusions of their colleague, which are put briefly by Mr. Justice Mahmood as follows:—"I hold that according to the Benares School of Hindoo law, no adoption can be legally made by a widow without the express permission of her husband; that where she makes an adoption without such permission the doctrine of factum valet, as understood in the Hindoo law or in other systems of jurisprudence, cannot cover the case, because it affects the very essence of the competency to take a child in adoption; that therefore such adoptions, though actually made, are wholly illegal and invalid, null and void, under the Benares School of Hindoo law prevalent in the territories within the jurisdiction of this Court."

COLONISING KASHMIR.

(Indian Daily News.)

An account is given in an up-country paper of an interesting attempt that is being made to colonise a portion of Kashmir territory. This is not an endeavour to realise Sir Lepel Griffin's dream of creating a British military colony in Kashmir, and there is nothing in the scheme inconsistent with the natural desire of the Durbar to preserve Kashmir for the Kashmiris. The valley of the Indus near Bunji, where the route to Gilgit crosses the river, forms a considerable plain, which was cultivated years ago and supported a considerable number of people. Partly owing to the devastating effects of internecine wars, and partly to a great flood which occurred in 1841, when this region was converted into a vast lake owing to the Indus being blocked further south, the whole plain has been a desert for some years past. Colonel Durand, British Resident in Gilgit, is said to have suggested that the valley might be again brought under cultivation if the old irrigation channels were restored, or fresh ones made, irrigation being essential; and the Durbar has taken up the idea. The old ruined water-courses are being repaired and new ones cut, and in a short time the region will be ready to receive a fresh colony of cultivators. These it is proposed to obtain from Baltistan, and outlying portion of Kashmir, where, it is reported, "numbers of families are practically landless, the men wandering every year in search of work to great distances." The experiment about to be tried is one of interest for the Indian administrator, apart from its value to the Kashmir State. There are in India tracts of country that are greatly over-populated, and where the pressure on the soil causes large numbers of the people to lead a precarious existence. There are also other considerable areas capable of supporting a much larger population than they own at present; and if the Kashmir Government can succeed in transferring a number of its subjects from one district to another, and inducing them to settle contentedly in their new "country," as a Native calls his village, it should be possible for the Government of India to organise similar schemes for peopling waste and semi-cultivated tracts, and simplifying the problem of existence in over-crowded districts.

THE TIBET QUESTION.

(Pioneer.)

It is, we venture to think, matter for regret that Mr. Hart is not to accompany the Chinese Amban to Lhasa. He is the one Englishman at the present time who could venture to travel through Tibet, for the Lamas are aware of the good services he has done them in the recent negotiations, and his position as a special envoy from China gives him a status which they would not fail to acknowledge. He stands in quite a unique position, and his cordial relations with the Amban himself would prevent any complications arising during his visit to the Tibetan capital. Whatever may be the exact terms of the treaty signed in Calcutta, enough is known for us to assert that China has disallowed the pretensions of the war-party in Tibet, and a reaction has probably by this time set in against them. The presence therefore of an Englishman at Lhasa, though he might actually be an officer of the Emperor of China, might go far to smooth the existing difficulties in the way of free communication and trade between India and Tibet. Mr. Hart and the Amban would be a strong combination in representing to the suspicious monks that now the late quarrel has come to an end old jealousies should not be kept alive. It may be galling to the Lamas' pride to remember how completely they were defeated in the "twenty years' war" which they were foolish enough to proclaim, but as all but a handful of troops will be removed from Sikkim, they must admit that no policy of aggression finds favour with the British Government. They are, we believe, keen traders naturally and monopolists in some branches of local commerce, but their absurd fear of strangers hinders them from making the most of their position. If no outside influences, such as those which Mr. Hart and the Amban could exert, are brought to bear upon them, it is to be feared that they will continue their policy of exclusion, and Tibet will still remain closed to the civilised world.

INDIA'S INFLUENCE ON ENGLAND.

(Madras Times.)

There are few subjects in the modern history of England more disputed than the influence of India on England. Generally, we are all quite clear as to England's influence on India, but "action and reaction are equal," the mechanical prophets say, and India, too, has an influence on England. On this point there is a mighty difference of opinion. Yet the influence must be great. Naturally, if left to himself on his own little island, an Englishman would be altogether narrow. Really, there is no broader man in the world than an intelligent and educated Englishman; and India has had something to do with it—with the historical insight of Macaulay, for instance, and the political philosophy of Mill. It is not too much to say that no Englishman leaves India without being vastly better, or vastly worse, than when he entered it. He may enter it a bigot and leave it with his bigotry intensified. He may enter it with few principles and leave it without possessing any principle at all. Or his bigotry may become smoothed away, and his principles strengthened by contact with an order of life entirely different from anything known to Europe, and indeed to any other part of Asia. One thing is certain—a thoughtful and earnest man, interested in the marvellous problems of human life, cannot enter India without taking away lessons which influence all his future. He cannot be insular, for he is imperial. He learns to govern, and he governs. He is brought face to face with facts involving millions of lives—famine, pestilence and every other scourge of the human race. He sees old creeds, and finds that the power of Hercules would not be able to remove them, and that any man will touch them at his peril by any rapid or rough process; temples in decay, proud cities in ruin, life, in many respects, almost exactly as it was when what is now ruin and decay was glowing with wealth, and oriental magnificence. Men whom one could name have come to India, and taken therefrom new views of the tenure of land, of "the education of the world," of the impossibility of applying to all races the principles of Government that may apply admirably to some. Toleration of creeds is one of the simplest lessons learned by every thoughtful and candid man, though there are bigots, of course, who do not tolerate, and never will. The influence on England of these great facts has been immense. The Frenchman may talk of British insularity, but he talks nonsense. The United Kingdom throws out her arms on every side, and draws to herself the idea of every land, and especially the ideas of India—lessons written on two hundred millions of living hearts, as well as on dead stone, and telling of the rise and fall of nations and races.

There is, however, the inevitable drawback. Young men, well educated, and of high spirit are thrown on the life of India to—what? As a rule, to—what? To pass over a certain number of years, at hard, incessant, grinding work, and then retire with a comfortable competence for life. The prizes are tempting, and the hard work is lightened by social intercourse, nowhere freer than in India. But the work, unaccompanied by other studies, merely sharpens and does not broaden the mind. A young magistrate, sitting day after day, hearing cases, without the remotest interest to him, because he despairs of arriving at the truth with respect to them, grows up to be a quicksighted and imperious man; but what in such a case—supposing the want of any deeper thought—does he carry back to England? Money, probably an impaired constitution, a good detailed knowledge of Eastern life, and a wish to finish up the chapter in peace and comfort. His children are separated from him. He loses the knowledge, ever precious to an Englishman, of English life, and cannot easily again make his sympathies to chord with those of "Home." Before the mind can be attuned as it was years before, the end comes, and then they put up a stone to his memory and tell of how he fought and where and how he ruled in India. This, however, is not a necessity of the position, and that it may not be so everyone should hope in his own case. In many instances, our Indian administrators take the loftiest of all ground; enter into the feelings of the poor and needy; preserve pure lives; and know and show that wealth is not to them the end of all, but merely the means of present and future usefulness. Then there is something of high value added to England's wealth.

Nationally, we say, this is one of the most important subjects that can engage the attention of Englishmen. Conquering nations have generally received an adverse influence from their conquests. They conquer and they are conquered, even when their power is highest. Has the Anglo-Saxon race found out a new rule, or has it not? Of course the "proper" answer is: "Yes, it has Christianity at the basis of all." We would grant the argument if Christianity really was at the basis at all, but unfortunately it is not, though it is sufficiently so to have modified English life and saved India from many a woe. The worst passions of men are held in check when we have to speak only of dead men: a soldier like Havelock or Durand, or a teacher like Bishop Heber. And here the influence of England on India has a direct palpable reaction on England. In some respects then the influence of India certainly is injurious to England. The lives of our people have been spent in vast numbers in this land. But our work certainly is for civilisation. By the mighty grasping policy—very questionable at times—we certainly have given to India a peace she never before had since her history began. She is arriving at a state when all her best energy may have free scope. England has the high honour of working out this problem, and holding for herself an Empire so vast that an Englishman may go the world round and still be among people who speak his own language. Other nations would have taken a different course. The English nation has taken its course, and the mighty deeds done in taking it have built up a noble history. Politically and religiously, India is attacking us in return. She challenges our creeds with the sharpest criticism. If we denounce her idols she denounces our faiths; and we have to learn to bear it and still work on. The sturdy lessons counterbalance the others. We are not decaying, as a nation, from contact with India. Individuals die off, or retire to Bath chairs at Brighton, or to golf, and valetudinarianism at St. Andrews. But we are broader as a nation from the contact. We see more of mankind as a whole, and if we can bind India to us by a cord of high and honourable loyalty, the bond may endure and add to the imperial grandeur of England, and the well-being of India when many other landmarks are gone.

CASTE AND SOCIAL REFORM.

(Madras Times.)

It is an axiomatic truth that one of the greatest barriers for the progress of the social reform movement is the system of caste that prevails in India. Although several pamphlets and leaflets have been written on the subject, to enlighten the people, in order to disabuse their minds of such superstitious ideas, yet, in the long run, they amounted to nothing more than preachings in the desert or hammerings of cold iron, as the majority of the masses at large are priest-ridden. When a widow is remarried herself, her husband and her parents are put out of caste by their priest, and by the community to which they belong. Nobody, after this remarriage is performed, dines with them; they are even debarred from entering any of the temples and bathing in the so-called sacred tanks. They are actually treated as out-castes not only by the community to which they belong to, but also by their kith and kin. I do not see how a Thangalay Brahmin becomes an out-caste, when he marries a widow of the same sect; the arguments put forth by the anti-social reformers, in support of their contention is, whoever marries a widow is deemed to be an out-caste, be he Brahmin or Sudra. The authority of the priests for such excommunication is based on two grounds. First. As the shastras are opposed to the re-marriage of widows, people are not allowed to countenance widow-marriages; anyone who transgresses the shastras is considered to be an out-caste. Second. Although the shastras sanction widow-marriages, still custom does not recognise the same; anyone who sets aside custom is declared to be an out-caste. These are some of the chief obstacles which stare the people in the face when they contemplate the re-marriage of their infant widows. In the dark ages several widows were re-married, and they were not put out of caste; even their children were considered to be legitimate offspring; but in this enlightened age, in which the people have been raised from the darkness of ignorance to the light of civilisation, people are put out of caste if they should re-marry a widow. In short, anyone who marries a widow is considered to be not a Hindu, but a Christian. A widow who is re-married is an out-caste, and she and her husband are not allowed to touch anything, as their touch pollutes them. A widow, without re-marrying, when she leads an immoral life, is not put out of caste; a moral life, by a legal marriage, is eschewed by the priests; but an immoral life, without any marriage, is approved by them. In order to show the public at large that widow-marriages were celebrated by the people, anciently, and that the married couple were not put out of caste, and that their offspring were considered legitimate, I shall quote two of the best instances where such widow-marriages were performed. (1) The re-marriage of Uluji, the widowed daughter of a patriarch of the Naga-tribe, who, on the death of her husband, was given in marriage by her father to the famous Arjuna, the hero of the Mahabharata story. Uluji in so many distinct words, is declared to have become one of Arjuna's many wives, the son she bore to him is emphatically described to be his legitimately born son and not one of the inferior sort of sons. The entire narrative in the Mahabharata, and still more emphatically in Jaimini's continuation, corroborates this assertion. (2) The story of the unfortunate daughter of the king of Benares, mentioned in Pathina Parana, who was married no less than twenty times, it being her peculiar misfortune, that as soon as the marriage rites were all performed, the husband so married died, but though this happened over and over again, the father, with the consent of the sage Brahmins of his Court, solemnly gave her in marriage as often as she became a widow. The emphatic words used in the text preclude the supposition contended for by some disputants that the several husbands were removed by death before, and not after, the binding marriage rites had been celebrated. Now I beg to ask of my learned pundits, why Arjuna and the daughter of the king of Benares were not put out of caste. If they were not, then will the pundits kindly explain to me why what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander? It can safely be said without fear of contradiction that the authorities of our priests for excommunicating men who marry widows is quite opposed to our shastras. To suit their own ends and purposes they have created these unauthorised laws, and through them they hold their sway over ignorant and superstitious people.

C. P. STREEHURRY NAIDU.

THE INCREASE OF THE INDIAN EPISCOPATE.

(Madras Times.)

The consecration of the first Bishop of Chota Nagpore again raises this question, perhaps in its most agreeable form. We say in its most agreeable form, because the new See is to be filled by a gentleman who has laboured for twenty years as a missionary among the Kols, and, in the strict sense of the word, will still remain a missionary. The honour conferred upon him, therefore, would seem to be a legitimate and natural result of the self-sacrificing and untiring labours which he has put forth for a long period in his efforts to raise from the most object paganism one of the most degraded and numerous tribes of Central India. The diocese over which the bishop will preside is as large as the whole of England, and contains 25,766 villages and towns. The population at the last census was about 4,000,000, including 2,567,292 Hindus; 169,006 Mohammedans; 1,073,475 persons professing aboriginal faiths; and about 25,000 Christians. Such figures represent, at all events, work enough to engage the attention and tax the energies of the strongest and most gifted cleric, and although the new diocese only represents a fragment of the vast district over which the metropolitan presides, it is, compared with the geographical area of an English diocese, of almost appalling dimensions. It is a healthy and gratifying sign of the times that the establishment of the new See is purely a development of church life; of ecclesiastical enterprise, we mean, as distinct from departmental. Bishop Whiteley holds his commission not from Her Majesty under the great Seal of England, but from his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

It will probably be within the remembrance of some of our readers that when the Metropolitan visited England two years since it was anticipated by certain English newspapers that one of the objects of his lordship's journey was to secure concessions from the Government in favour of a considerable increase of the Indian Episcopate. The Indian Church Review of that period naturally gave the suggestion its warmest support. But popular feeling at home was rightly interpreted by both the Premier and the Secretary of State for India; and it was decided that no further extension of the Indian Episcopate by letters patent could occur. The tendency of the times was rather in the direction of strict limitation. The Report of the Finance Committee which had been appointed to report upon the various items of departmental and miscellaneous expenditure was also before the Cabinet. Members were familiar, moreover, with the vigorous minute of dissent appended to the original report of the Commissioners by the Hon. Mr. M. G. Ranade. State obligations to provide religious ministrations in India had been fully discussed in a despatch dated October 3, 1883, in which the history of the question was fully reviewed, and certain modifications were proposed by Lord Ripon's Government, and even this only represented a part of the case. It was well known not only that the Commissioners themselves were not agreed, but that a strong minority on the Viceroy's council in 1883 held that all the "past declarations of policy were vague and incomplete." The limitation of the ministrations of religion to British-born European servants of the Crown, and especially for soldiers and their families, as set out in Lord Northbrook's despatch of March 3, 1876, and held by the majority as an obiter dictum, clashed, according to the views of the minority, with previous declarations; and the question at issue was that of the obligation of Government for the future, rather than that of the interpretation of past documents.

As a matter of fact, Government was in something of a difficulty. A small dilemma was created by the calm and measured statement of Lord Ripon's Council on the one hand, and the urgent plea of the Metropolitan for the immediate extension of the Episcopate on the other. The Viceroy's views were more comprehensive than the Bishop's, but there was a strong argument in the extent of existing dioceses. The minority in the Council held, that ministers should provide for soldiers and their families, and for European and British born servants of State railways, belonging to the Church of England, the Church of Rome, the Presbyterian, or the Wesleyan denomination. For small stations, they held that the grant-in-aid system should be gradually adopted; but that the question of bishoprics was distinct, and would require separate consideration. Just previously great changes had taken place in the relation between the Government and the church in Ceylon; and while this was a strong argument for moving the Government to immediate action with regard to the Indian Episcopate, it was equally an argument for caution in official circles. Since the original decision of Lord Salisbury's Cabinet on the question two years since, however, new pressure has been brought to bear, and it has been decided, we understand, to appoint, by letters patent, a new Bishop of Lucknow. Certain special conditions are to be complied with, but even in that case the concession must, we fear, be regarded in the light of a doubtful experiment. The expenditure in the ecclesiastical department reaches a total of almost twenty lakhs per annum. More than this ought not, in the present temper of the public mind on the question of religious endowments, to be taken for the purpose of providing religious ministrations in cathedrals and cantonment churches for civil servants and other wealthy persons, who, as has been recently pointed out in official correspondence on the subject, are well able to look after themselves. Something might be done by way of the readjustment of existing grants. Government, at all events, should not be hampered at present with hasty and impolitic demands. We rejoice at such ecclesiastical advancement and enterprise as have been recently exhibited at Chota Nagpore, with all the educational and philanthropic progress which they involve. It is another proof to us of the unbounded resources of the Church, and the remarkable vigour of her life. No better illustration could possibly be afforded of her powers of natural development by her own methods, and we do not hesitate to express our conviction, therefore, that it is as unnecessary, as it is too late in the day, to ask for, or to expect, much further extension of the Indian Episcopate by Imperial decree.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICES.

(Anglo-India.)

The promise of the Home Government to move for the appointment of a Special Committee of the House to inquire into the grievances of the Uncovenanted Civilians may mean little or much, according to the terms of the reference, which we, of course, do not yet know. Should the Committee be instructed merely to report on the extent of injury inflicted on the services by the fall in the value of silver, its proceedings will advance matters much less than they would be likely to do if it were also instructed to report on the extent of the relief to which they are fairly entitled. For about the extent of the injury, as far at least as pensions and furlough allowances are concerned, there has never been any dispute. A great deal, again, will depend on whether the inquiries of the Committee are to be limited to the effect of the fall in silver on sterling payments, or whether they are to be extended to its effect on the purchasing power of salaries paid in India. It has always seemed to us that the comparatively slight stress laid on the latter point in recent discussions and representations has been a mistake. For, of the two sources of injury, we doubt whether the diminished purchasing power of rupee salaries, at all events in the case of married men with families, is not really the more important. In any case, it is so martial an element in the total loss that it ought not to be allowed to fall into the background. There is a widespread feeling at home that even the Uncovenanted Civil Servants of the Indian Government enjoy comparatively handsome salaries, and that they can well afford to put by enough to insure themselves against the falling off in their pensions. The argument, no doubt, savours of impertinence, since it is postposterous that a man should have to insure against failure on the part of his employers to carry out the spirit of their contract with him. But, nevertheless, it is not without weight with people who take what they are pleased to consider practical views of things, and there is no doubt that it is largely based on a mistaken notion that salaries in India are still what they were a generation ago. The truth of the matter, as every European servant of the Government knows to his cost, is that salaries which a few years ago were liberal enough, now represent, in most cases, no more, and in many much less, than a bare competency. Whatever some authorities may say to the contrary, the cost of living in India has risen all round; and, so far from being able to lay by anything to supplement his pension, a man with a family finds it hard enough to make both ends meet and find the extra 50 per cent. which the fall in exchange has added to the cost of his home remittances; yet, unless the Government means deliberately to discourage matrimony, or to encourage mixed marriages among its European servants, the criterion of a sufficient salary for them is its adequacy for the purpose of enabling them to support a wife and children from, say, the eighth or tenth year of their service, and educate the latter to fill a position at least equal to their own.

SOME VERY HUMBLE CITIZENS.

THE POLICEMAN.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Everyone who has been in Bombay knows, of course, that the Bombay Policeman dresses in a dark blue uniform with bright yellow facings, yellow cap, and chuppals. He is also provided with a brass number, a leathern belt, a whistle, and a baton. During the monsoons a humane Government allows him an umbrella, covered over with oilskin, of that peculiar shade of green which would have delighted the heart of Bunthorne; but in my opinion, although a dress of this colour might look nice (on a pretty woman) I do not think a policeman's umbrella is a pretty article. Lieut. Lovett, in his excellent sketch of the Policeman which he sends to the Exhibition this year, has happily rendered the uncompromising bulge of the umbrella, and has evidently noticed the graceful manner that it is always carried at the "trail." I can also state that that portion of the Native public which gets drunk and disorderly is of the same opinion, for during that inclement season of the year when these useful articles are in requisition nine out of the ten people placed before the magistrate on this charge are always shown the remains of an umbrella, which they are said to have broken. I would suggest to the proper authorities the substitution of some less æsthetic colour. But now I come to think of it it can scarcely be the colour that these individuals object to, for I have remarked that they are equally fond of smashing up the brass number of the sepoy. Now, no reasonable individual can object to brass on the score of its colour. It must be that the sepoy brings his umbrella too prominently forward when "persuading" a drunken man to go to a chowkey which leads to its being broken. I shall, however, interview one of the umbrella-breaking class on the point, and settle my doubts once for all.

The sepoy is required to do a good many things, and he is also enjoined not to do a good many more; but our sepoy is an ingenious individual, and while having his own sweet will and pleasure in all things succeeds in keeping out of trouble. It is a generally understood matter that a policeman should interfere when a free fight goes on in his presence. But it does not suit him so to do. If he happens to be around when a fight is going on, he calmly turns aside and waits for it to be over. He then steps in, and arrests all the misguided individuals who have been silly enough to have got their heads broken, or have otherwise rendered themselves incapable of running away. Why does he do this thing? Why! Because he has fifty good reasons for it. Suppose he rushed into the middle of a dozen men who were laying about them with clubs. The consequence would be that he would, almost of a certainty, be damaged, and the combatants would get away. This means that he would go to hospital for a certain number of days, where he would eat the bread of idleness and consume a certain amount of drugs and chemicals at the expense of Government. By not acting in this rash manner he allows the combatants to enjoy the innocent amusement of knocking one another about as completely as possible. He then steps in, without any risk to himself, and collects the people or portions of the people, which have been left lying loosely about. These men are convicted of disorderly behaviour and fined, and immediately take out summonses against the other combatants who effected their escape. In taking out summonses they are required to pay certain fees, which add to the revenue of Government, and they have to give the policeman serving the summonses a certain amount of liquor or vegetables or the equivalent in annas—which adds to the revenue of the policeman.

It has also been stated in disparagement of the sepoy that when he sees an inebriated mariner indulging in actions which tend to the hurt of Her Majesty's subjects, as they sometimes do in a playful manner, he suddenly discovers a fire or something which requires his presence at the other end of the town. Now, it is well known that a sepoy cannot fight with his fists. If he interfered with the mariner and did not use his baton the mariner would hurt him. If he did use his baton he would injure the mariner—an unpleasant result in either case. If the mariner is left alone he either goes away of his own accord or attracts the attention of a European officer of the force, with whom he either does or does not go away quietly. If he does all is well. If he does not, he gives the officer some exercise in the noble art of self-defence which cannot but be beneficial to the officer.

On this point to I am inclined to accept the sepoy's view as the correct one.

Some of the restrictions placed on the sepoy's actions are invidious in the extreme, and a proof of his innate good nature lies in the fact that he does not complain of these; on the contrary, he accepts them with apparent readiness, and then sets about discovering means to render them inoperative, or to render them as little troublesome as possible. This renders the enactors of these regulations happy in the consciousness of a duty discharged, while it removes from their souls the weight of a great wrong which they would have done to their fellow-creatures had the sepoys observed the same. As all the world knows the sepoy is forbidden to purchase the articles he consumes at dinner while he is dressed in uniform. The authorities are aware that a Native has a great respect for a police uniform, and that he has an exaggerated opinion of the powers conferred on the wearer of it. They are also aware that a Native is apt to try and win the protection of such gifted beings with little offerings in the shape of ghee, dhal, and rice. The intention of the authorities is therefore obvious, and as the promulgation of the order is a distinct reflection on the sepoy he might have been well excused if he had resented it. But he does not resent it, and he makes no purchases when dressed in uniform. During the day, while in uniform, he goes round to the shop, and after impressing the shopkeeper with his varied and extensive powers says he will purchase what he needs on his way home. This he does with as much satisfaction and profit to himself as though he were arrayed in his full panoply. The shopkeeper is also well satisfied, as he imagines that for the trifling outlay of a few annas' worth of provisions he has secured the protection of a powerful patron, who will ensure his protection from illegal arrest and execution, and who will also benignantly overlook any trifling irregularity on the part of his client. In this manner are two individuals at least rendered completely happy.

Besides going on duty or "para," a sepoy is called upon to perform many other functions. He has to beat a battaki. To those who are ignorant of what this means I may explain that when anything special has to be communicated to the public by the police authorities a sepoy is entrusted with a copper utensil, and is told to go to the principal places in and around his section where, after collecting as large a crowd as possible with the beating of his copper plate, he is to impart to them the requisite information. This usually consists of a warning of the approach of small-pox or cholera; but one gentleman who had just been promoted—I am talking of a matter that occurred a great many years ago—thought he would vary the scope of these battaki communications. Now budmashes know more of what is going on in the police than the police themselves, and so it came about that this disagreeable class of people knew that this gentleman was going to be made Superintendent, and prepared to give him a warm reception, as he was unpopular. They did make things pretty lively for him till he thought he would have a battaki beaten, informing people that robbery and theft were so much on the increase in his division that he would advise all respectable people to bury their money and jewels. Now this was a very sensible thing to do; but some newspapers heard of the matter and treated it in that flippant and pigheaded manner which they are renowned for, and that Superintendent was asked to attend at the office, and the Commissioner said things to him—things quite unfit for publication. Thus is originality rewarded in the Police!

When a sepoy is entrusted with the beating of a battaki a great sadness seems to steal over him. He walks with his head bent down, the copper utensil under his arm. Suddenly he seems to recollect what he is required to do, and with startling suddenness begins beating his instrument long enough to arrest the attention of four boys and a girl who are playing marbles. When these are gathered round him he begins reciting in a monotonous and wholly unintelligible manner what he has to say. The boys and girl listen to him for a few seconds, and then go back to their marbles, and the sepoy is left to address the wall, opposite to which he is standing. When he has finished he walks sorrowfully away, and again repeats the performance further down the street.

After a long and intimate acquaintance with the sepoy I have come to the conclusion that he has the welfare of his country at heart.

Everyone knows the brisk trade carried on by petty vendors in the streets of Bombay. It has lately been sought in certain quarters to discourage this street traffic, and the sepoy has been told to arrest as many of the vendors of fruits, vegetables, &c., as he can. Now the sepoy knows that if he does so he will discourage trade, and he knows that trade is good for a country. So he walks up to a street vendor, say, of green-skinned plantains, and gently insinuates that he has received orders to take her into custody. He then talks on indifferent topics for a few minutes, when the vendor remarks that she has some particularly fine specimens of plantains that day on which she desires the sepoy's opinion. After tasting two or three plantains he gives his opinion which, is valuable to the woman, as the sepoy has a cultivated palate in the matter of green-skinned plantains. Sometimes he meets with vendors who are defiant and insulting when he first introduces himself. These people he arrests. W.

RAJPUT MARRIAGES.

(Englishman.)

While most parts of India suffer from the system of early marriages, Rajputana has been labouring under a very different grievance. The Rajputs have for generations experienced difficulty in getting their daughters married, partly in consequence of the difficulty of finding husbands of suitable family, and partly because of the marriage expenses, which include one or two heavy charges not customary in other parts of India. Under the pressure of these circumstances the Rajputs borrow money, mortgage their jewels, lands, jaghir villages, and other property, live in a state of chronic debt, and yet have to see their daughters grow up to the age sometimes of thirty years unmarried. But two years ago Colonel Walter, Agent to the Governor-General, cautiously formed a society of prominent men of different States, for the purpose of checking these evils. The members of the society, or Sabha, had sense enough to see the nature of the bondage under which the customs enslaved them, and to understand that if they made a united stand the customs would have to give way. So they laid down certain rules, both for their marriages and for their funeral expenses, which also are ruinously heavy, and pledged themselves to submit to admonitions and fines if they neglected them. The result had been wonderful, and says much for the mental and moral fibre of the Rajput race, and for the personal influence of Colonel Walter, who, by the way, has just been succeeded by Colonel Trevor. The system being entirely voluntary it is gratifying to learn that whereas in the first year only 194 marriages and 153 funerals were registered, in the second year, that is, last year, the numbers were 1,291 and 724. It is still more satisfactory that the proportion of tueses which infringed the regulations was considerably smaller than the proportion in the first year. Some of the rules are jocose, e.g., every daughter must be married before she is twenty; and no member of the Sabha is to allow money to be advanced to a Rajput in excess of the prescribed expenditure for a marriage or a funeral. The number of guests or of persons to go in the marriage procession is also fixed, and is entered for each member in the Sabha's books; and a boy's father may privately ascertain and confidentially communicate to the local committee or branch Sabha the annual income of the father of the girl he designs for his son. Another sound rule is that a man is not to take a second wife in the lifetime of the first.

BENGAL.

(April 15.)

THE rate of exchange in Calcutta at noon on Monday was 1s. 5 9-32d.

THE NAWAB BAHADUR OF MOORSHEDEABAD was suddenly attacked with apoplexy on the 8th inst. This has been followed by paralysis of the right side. He is, however, improving.

In the Calcutta High Court on Monday Mr. Justice Prinsep and the Advocate-General expressed great sorrow of the Court at the news of the death of Sir Louis Jackson, and spoke warmly of the high esteem in which deceased was held by all classes of the community.

BEPEN BEHARY CHUCKERBUTTY, a Bengali graduate hailing from Dacca, heads the list of successful students at the last final examination of the Roorkee Civil Engineering College. He has carried off the Council of India prize of Rs. 1,000, Thomason's prize of Rs. 250, the Cantley gold medal for mathematics, and prizes for the best engineering design.

MADRAS.

(April 16.)

AN action against the Secretary of State has been commenced in the Madras High Court in connection with the Bellary-Kistna State Railway, Mr. Derry, contractor, claiming damages to the extent of eight lakhs of rupees for an alleged breach of contract.

INTIMATION has been received by Government that Major Coaker, Royal Engineers, who was selected to act for Colonel C. J. Smith as Consulting Engineer for Railways, is too sick to return to India at present. Colonel Jopp will probably be offered the appointment pro tem. It is not likely that Colonel Smith will return to India.

THE amalgamation of the Mysore Anche post with the imperial post is not formally completed, owing to discrepancies amounting to about a quarter of a lakh of rupees being discovered by Mr. Doran, Personal Assistant to the Director-General of Post Offices, sent on special duty to make all preparations for the anche being taken over by the Director-General, who purposed taking over the charge personally.

THE Nizam's Government has decided to establish a public library in the capital to aid a movement for translating all useful English books into Urdu, and to undertake archaeological survey throughout the dominions. His Highness furthermore intends to depute at Government expense two medical students, one a Christian, and one a Mahomedan, to accompany Dr. Lawrie to England, when the latter goes home on furlough next month, to complete their medical education. The students will be absent on deputation for two years.

BOMBAY.

(April 18.)

ASSISTANT-SURGEON G. M. DIXON acts as Civil Surgeon, Karwar, vice Surgeon-Major J. A. Howell.

MR. G. W. COTGRAVE, District Superintendent of Police, Tanna, has been allowed leave, on medical certificate, for one year.

LADY REAY'S fancy fair has resulted in a net profit to the Female Medical Aid Fund of Rs. 36,089-4-3.

DURING the absence of Mr. H. T. Ommanney, C.S., Mr. H. Scannell acts as Inspector-General of Police, and Mr. E. C. Cox acts as Superintendent of Police, G.I.P. Railway.

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE FARRAN, who has been appointed to act as a Judge of the High Court during the absence of the Hon. Mr. Justice Scott, took his seat on the Bench on Saturday.

LADY REAY has given from the proceeds of the late Fancy Fair the splendid donation of Rs. 10,000 towards the Convalescent Home in connection with the new St. George's Hospital.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR has appointed Colonel K. A. Jopp, R.E., Officiating Consulting Engineer for Railways, Bombay, a member of the Board of Trustees of the Port of Bombay, vice Lieut.-Colonel F. Firebrace, R.E.

OUT of the 55 candidates who presented themselves for the High Court Pleaders' examination only one student, named Mr. Vithal Gunesh Pradhan, is declared to have passed the examination. Of the 313 candidates for the District Pleaders' examination 24 have been successful. Among those who have passed the latter examination, a student, named Mr. Narayen Bhore, is totally blind.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

(April 16.)

MR. HILL, officiating Inspector-General of Forests, who is now on a visit to Lahore, has arrived in Simla.

It is very unlikely that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, this year, will go up to the hills before the middle of May.

THE Stewards of the Simla races have decided not to hold the usual races next month, as the course at Anandale will not be in a fit condition. The racecourse for ordinary Gymkhanas will have to be considerably curtailed in consequence.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT has arrived in Simla from Bombay. The Public Works member travelled by the Rajputana-Malwa line, and halted at Delhi, there to inquire into the question of the new junction, and afterwards inspected the Umballa-Kalka Railway, attended by Mr. Way, the Agent and Managers.

THE actual loss from the Simla fire is not likely to be over five lakhs, house property and stores included, and it is not expected that there will be much occasion to ask for aid from the public on behalf of the sufferers. Several subscriptions, besides the Viceroy's gift of Rs. 1,000, have been promised. One result of the fire has been the issue of strict regulations forbidding all fires in upper attics in the bazaar.

A PUBLIC meeting to inquire into the water-supply question is likely to be called shortly.

DEMORALISATION OF NATIVE RACES.

TO THE EDITOR.

On Thursday, May 1st, a meeting took place under the presidency of his Grace the Duke of Westminster, of the Society "For the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic." This society deserves high praise for what it is doing with regard to Africa and Oceania, and we wish them every success, but we do protest against the interference of travelling members of Parliament, like Messrs. Caine and Sam. Smith, and other ignorant philanthropic individuals in the affairs of a great Empire like British India, which has a constitutional Government, and has as great a right to be independent as Canada and Australia as regards the details of its Civil Government. Only a month ago the Chancellor of the Exchequer cynically remarked in his Budget speech, "that the English nation had again drunk themselves out of their debt, and had made a ruck on alcohols to the tune of two millions additional excise."

Surely Messrs. Caine and Sam. Smith had better look at home and not strain at an Indian gnat while they swallow an English camel. This sentiment was bluntly expressed at the meeting by one of the speakers, Mr. R. N. Cust, late member of H.M.'s Indian Civil Service and now magistrate of the Liberty of Westminster. He remarked, "That it was unwise to flog a willing horse, and that in this matter the Government of India had always been a willing horse, doing their very best to contest the supply of liquor; that he (Mr. Cust) had for many years superintended the issue of licenses of the so-called 'out stills' in Northern India, striving to reduce the number down to the extreme limit that the facility of illicit distillation permitted; that since he returned to England he was employed under the control of his Grace the chairman, Lord-Lieutenant of the county of London in issuing licenses to the 'out stills'."

of the Liberty of Westminster, and that he could state that there was no square mile in the world where there were so many 'out stills,' or, in other words, 'public houses' as in the area under the shadow of the Abbey and Houses of Parliament and within hearing of the constant foolish ravings of Mr. Caine, M.P., on the subject of India. The nobles of India and the upper classes, who were hereditary abstainers from all liquor by the law of their caste, could not understand how honest men could say such things about India, and allow such things under their very eyes in London." What did the pot say to the kettle?

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 25.

—O:—

INDIAN FINANCE.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he could now state whether any and which of the recommendations made by the Indian Finance Committee on December 20, 1886, had been accepted and acted upon, and what were specifically the savings which had been effected.

Sir J. GORST: The recommendations which have been adopted and are now being acted on are:—Arrangements with provincial governments in 1887, Rx. 640,100; reductions in public expenditure, Rx. 57,480; reorganisation of public works department, Rx. 157,500; allowances for hill stations and Simla travelling allowances, Rx. 12,600; various (salt and customs, High Courts, Presidency allowances, &c.), Rx. 45,540; supplementary proposals, Rx. 182,648; total, Rx. 1,095,868. Some of these reductions, though adopted, will only take effect gradually.

INDIAN COUNCILS REFORM.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether it was a fact that the late Viceroy and the present Viceroy of India had, in minutes severally addressed to the Secretary of State, expressed opinions in favour of the introduction of the elective principle in any reform of the Indian councils; and, if so, whether he would lay such minutes upon the table of the House.

Sir JOHN GORST: The papers asked for in the question are confidential communications which have been made by the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State. It has already been stated in both Houses of Parliament that these papers cannot be given with due regard to the interests of the public service. Publication of such documents would put a stop to those confidential relations between the Secretary of State and the Viceroy of India which it is essential to maintain. As the papers cannot be produced, I cannot answer the inquiry as to the nature of their contents.

APRIL 28.

TAXES IN CEYLON.

In answer to Mr. PICTON,

Baron H. DE WORMS said that the taxes on paddy and fine grain realised in 1887 934,804 rupees, and in 1888 937,637 rupees. The estimate for 1890 is 945,380 rupees. The cost of collection cannot be given, as it is impossible to estimate how much of the time of the administrative officers is devoted to this one tax, and therefore how much of their salaries should be charged against it.

INDIAN SILVER PLATE.

Mr. KIMBER asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, before he finally decided upon the question of hall-marking of Indian silver plate of rupee standard, he would cause inquiry to be made respecting the practice of "soldering" in India on the part of Native workmen; whether that practice varied immensely; whether any fixed standard would apply to Indian art workmanship; and whether, in view of the valuable reports of Her Majesty's Consuls, in Parliamentary paper No. 59, Foreign Countries (Gold and Silver Marking), it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government, before proceeding to amend the laws relating to the hall-marking of gold and silver wares, to refer the matter to a Select Committee.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: As far as the question refers to India, I can assure the hon. member that no steps will be taken without consulting the authorities in that country as to Indian requirements. As the modification in the hall-marking law is so slight, Her Majesty's Government have no intention of referring the matter to a Select Committee for the present—(hear, hear).

MAY 1.

LEPROSY IN UPPER BURMA

Mr. WEBSTER asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was a fact, as stated by the Press, "that the prevalence of leprosy in Upper Burma is attracting some attention;" and if such was the case, whether any practicable steps could be taken by the authorities to prevent its spreading into other parts of Burma.

Sir J. GORST: No information has reached the Secretary of State about the prevalence of leprosy in Upper Burma; but he is aware that proposals have been made for establishing, with Government aid, a lepers' home at Mandalay. When the Leper Bill now before the Indian Legislature becomes law it will become possible to segregate lepers in Upper Burma, and for local bodies to raise funds for the maintenance of lepers' homes.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

TALES OF THE SUN.*

Wonders surely will never cease. Here we have lying before us a volume of Indian Folklore, without a single allusion to the Sungod or to any other ethnological myths. Mrs. Kingscote, aided by her intelligent Pandit, has been content to produce simply a collection of tales gathered together from the bazaars, and merely purged from modern corruptions and vulgarisms. They are more curious than entertaining. For one thing, there is no attempt to delineate character. There is no shading, no foreshortening. We are reminded of the gaudy grotesque figures of animals one so frequently sees daubed on the walls of houses and temples in India. Mrs. Kingscote, however, must not be blamed for bestowing local and not European colouring. She simply tells the tales as they were told to her, and is not answerable for their inferiority to the folklore of Western nations. The absence of humour is especially remarkable. Do Indian children never laugh? Is the sole object of the story-teller to frighten them and fill them with wonder? They seem to be brought up under the impression that the world is almost wholly depraved, and that a wise, chaste, and loving wife is an exceptional rarity. Cunning is evidently more thought of than virtue. Duplicité is very mildly condemned, though downright stupidity is generally placed in a roundabout light, but it is usually too crass to raise even a smile. At the same time these stories are quite genuine. They are thoroughly Indian, and are racy of the soil. They are consequently cast in the same mould, and thus become monotonous, if the volume be read through at a stretch from beginning to end. Selected, however, two or three at a time they would be vastly popular in even English nurseries, and would lead to endless questionings. Mrs. Kingscote is, therefore, to be congratulated on the result of her industry and application.

THE RAJAH'S HEIR.†

In these days of luxurious ease and ill-concealed effeminacy it is well that thoughts should turn now and again to the awful events of the Mutiny of 1857—a period when our rule in India tottered for a while in the balance; but a period too, and thank God it was so—when the heroism of the nation shone forth with undimmed splendour—a period when England's sons, England's daughters, ay, it may almost be written, England's babes, displayed powers of "doing and daring," which have left an imperishable record on the annals of Time. Sad, harrowing, revolting, doubtless, were the scenes of that awful rebellion; but though hearts quailed, danger never terrified, murders, massacres, and crimes too fearful for contemplation were the daily surroundings of all that this nation held dear and precious. Our countrymen passed through the ordeal thinned in numbers, tortured alike in body and soul, but with a halo of glory which time can never dim.

It is amidst these scenes of riot and revolt that "The Rajah's Heir" takes its readers. To anyone familiar with the events of that momentous struggle there are not wanting indications that, though a veil of romance is purposely drawn across the various stirring episodes which the writer depicts, there is a substratum of truth in the volumes under review. At least this much may be hazarded with certainty—the author manifestly is not only familiar with the East, but took part in the Mutiny. There are traces of his experience in every page. Who, for instance, could depict the "Nepal Terai," that terrible, well-nigh impassable, jungle so fatal to Europeans, and the death-bed of many a poor, haunted, desolate creature who, to avoid the cruelties and insults of man, felt a prey to the no less deadly, but haply more merciful, assaults of Nature. Who, again—so far as the ordinary public is concerned—is aware of the imbecility in high quarters, of neglected opportunities, of misused chances? In a word, who knows in this old England how her sons passed through an ordeal which left wives, widows and children orphans, which unsexed daughters and gave to lisping children the baptism of danger? No, imagination would fail to portray scenes so terrible as were crowded into a few short months of the ever-memorable summer of 1857.

As to the mode in which the author has acquitted himself of his self-imposed task of recalling attention to the episode of '57, the highest praise would not be flattering; the fault, if such it be, is that the chapters are, at times, almost too harrowing for those who have a heart to remember and a soul to pity. But can it be as the author would have it believed, that an English lady threw in her lot with these infamous wretches, on whose banners were inscribed in letters which even after a lapse of thirty years occasion a shudder of disgust, the sickening motto, "plunder, rapine, murder, and lust? Can it be credited that a "white Rani" so far forgot the modesty of her sex and the ties of Western lineage as to hound on a half frenzied Eastern horde of rebels to dip their hands in the blood of her quondam friends, relatives, and associates? For the sake of humanity it may be hoped that this terrible blot on England's escutcheon is but the fertile fancy of romance. And yet, surely no one would wish to impute unnecessarily such an odious charge even to the humblest daughter of the empire, much less to a lady nurtured in luxury, educated amidst the surroundings of Britain's purity and sweetness, and married to an officer sworn to defend the innocent and protect the weak!

To our judgment this is the only blot in a novel which appeals to us with all the force which events of 1857 must ever possess to send in our midst, whose memory still lingers amidst scenes hallowed by universal heroism, but saddened by individual sufferings, which nothing can efface from the tablets of the heart.

The United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.), under its change of proprietors and management, keeps up the good promise made when this change was first announced. The magazine now takes a wider scope than did its predecessor—old and much-esteemed Colburn—and embraces a review of all questions affecting national interests. The issue for the present month contains several articles of varied interest, but all excellent in their way, and penned by men whose names are guarantees that they write with authority. The "Services" will find food for reflection in Mr. Spencer Wilkinson's paper on "Responsibilities in War," in that by Mr. George Hooper on the "Soudan Campaign," and in the story of "Waterloo" as it continues to be told by Colonel Maurice in his graphic style. The Volunteers are provided for in the article on the "Easter Manœuvres," and Colonel King's "Round about Bisley." Two articles on "Obstacles to Imperial Federation," one by the Editor, and one, "An Australian's View," by G. H. Gossip, will well repay perusal; but we shall notice these at greater length in another issue of our paper. The May number of the magazine is altogether an excellent one—capital reading, and brightened by the stirring Ode of Algernon Swinburne on England, from which we cull the following:—

"Sea and strand, and a lordlier land than sea-tides rolling and ising sun
Clasp and lighten in climes that brighten with day when day that was here is done,
Call aloud on their children, proud with trust that future and past are one.
Far and near from the swan's nest here the storm-birds bred of her fair white breast, Sons whose home was the sea-wave's foam, have borne the fame of her east and west;
North and south has the storm-wind's mouth rung praise of England and England's quest.
"Fame, wherever her flag flew, never forbore to fly with an equal wing:
France and Spain with their warrior train bowed down before her as thrall to king;
India knelt at her feet, and felt her sway more fruitful of life than spring.
"Darkness round them as iron bound fell off from races of elder name,
Slain at sight of her eyes, whose light bids freedom lighten and burn as flame;
Night endures not the touch that cures of kingship tyrants, and slaves of shame."
"Music made of change and conquest, glory born of evil slain,
Stilled the discord, slew the darkness, bade the lights of tempest wane,
Where the deathless dawn of England rose in sign that right should reign.

"Mercy, where the tiger wallowed mad and blind with blood and lust,
Justice, where the jackal yelped and fed, and slaves allowed it just,
Rose as England's light on Asia rose, and smote them down to dust.

"Justice bright as mercy, mercy girt by justice with her sword,
Smote and saved and raised and ruined, till the tyrant-ridden horde
Saw the lightning fade from heaven and knew the sun for god and lord."

"A light that is more than the sunlight, an air that is brighter than morning's breath, Clothes England about as the strong sea clasps her, and answers the word that it saith;
The word that assures her of life if she change not, and choose not the ways of death.

"Change darkens and lightens around her, alternate in hope and in fear to be:
Hope knows not if fear speak truth, nor fear whether hope be not blind as she:
But the sun is in heaven that beholds her immortal, and girdled with life by the sea."

The National Review (W. H. Allen and Co.) for May is lighter and more pleasant reading (as befits the month itself) than were some of the numbers of this periodical during the dreary winter time. Mr. Alfred Austin's song of gladness on "Returning to England," where all his friends and literary admirers will welcome him, is delightful, and helps as he sings:—

"To make one love this lovely earth
And bless Heaven for one's British birth."

Mr. Frederick Pincott, who contributes an article, "Home rule not wanted for India," may not, however, desire to share in such an orison for having taken an extraordinary interest in the National Congress of India. We almost imagine that he regrets not having been born under Eastern skies. He loves the Bengali Babu, and he sees in the agitation which their representatives are trying to force upon us here, "the continent of India raising its gigantic form, and knitting together its strength to demand the rights of freedom for its sons." Anglo-Indians have not all yet reached to this height of vision. We prefer Mr. Keene's views to Mr. Pincott's. "A Persian Chaucer," by Chas. Pickering; "Was I also Hypnotised?" by Adolphus Trollope; and "Insect Communities," by Mrs. Fenwick Miller, are papers which will find many appreciative readers.

THE engineers of the Southern Mahratta Railway have almost completed their work of carrying the line over the difficult Nallamallai Range, and trains will shortly be run from a point on the Kistna opposite Bezwada to Castle Rock, where a junction is effected with the Goa Railway.

CAPTAIN STREET, Presidency Port Officer, Madras, has gone to Paumben to ascertain if the Indian Marine steamer Investigator can get through the Palk Strait on her return voyage to Bombay, thereby obviating the necessity of going round to Colombo, while the weather south of that island is unsettled.

THE appointment by the Government of Madras of Deputy Surgeon-General Donnelly, C.B., to succeed Dr. Bidie as Surgeon-General is cancelled by the Government of India on account of age. Dr. Bidie left on Monday by the Clan Macarthur. The vacant appointment will probably be offered to Deputy Surgeon-General W. F. de Fabeck.

It is satisfactory, says the Pioneer, to note in the review of the revenue administration in the Punjab for last year that the collections are being carried out much more thoroughly and successfully than was the case a few years back. The demand for the year on account of fixed land revenue was somewhat over 201 lakhs, and of this 99.1 per cent. was collected. In particular the outstanding balances in the Gurgaon and Montgomery districts, where the accumulation of arrears was at one time little short of a financial scandal, have now wholly disappeared.

THE result of the Entrance Examination of the Punjab University have been published. Out of 906 candidates at the examination 413 proved successful. This corresponds to a pass percentage of 45.58 per cent., as against 37.8 per cent. in 1889 and 23.4 per cent. in 1888. Fifty-two candidates passed in the first, 188 in the second, and 173 in the third division. The results have been published with very praiseworthy promptitude, as only seventeen days have elapsed since the conclusion of an examination which lasted for more than a week—namely, from the 17th to 25th ultimo.

NORTHAMPTON AND INDIA.

THE connection between the above-named places has hitherto not been closer than that between Tenterden Steeple and the Goodwin Sands; but now that Mr. Bradlaugh has obtained from his shoemaking constituents a hearing for the Indian delegates, Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. Allan Hume, and Surendra Nath Banerjee, Northampton may, perhaps, in time show that it takes some interest in Indian questions and the wants of the Indian National Congress. At present, however, the interest taken by the community which Mr. Bradlaugh represents is rather of a lukewarm nature, judging from the appeal he had to make to them on the occasion of the reception of the Indian delegates on the 24th of last month. According to the Northampton Reporter Mr. Bradlaugh said to his friends:—"Now, if I knew how to speak I would speak so as to wake in you, as I have not yet, an interest in this Indian people. Why do you not crowd every corner of this building, outside and inside, to-night? It is not a little question. You have fought for me; you have crowded this hall for me; you stood by me. Oh! by these 200,000,000 whose homes you have desecrated, whose countries you have ploughed with the iron of cannon wheels; oh! for those who appeal to you to-night, not for justice for the past, but to give them the means of common government, of self-deliverance in the future, to you I would plead if I knew how." The compliment paid to the inferred power possessed by the Northampton audience to right the averred wrongs of the two hundred millions of India is neat and well-turned, and must have flattered the men of leather considerably. The National Reformer, Mr. Bradlaugh's own paper, gives Mr. Bradlaugh's speech in extenso; but with regard to the Indian Delegates says only that "a very hearty reception" was accorded to them, and that "Mr. Banerjee, who spoke with great eloquence, made an impassioned appeal for justice to his fellow-countrymen." All the rest is "Mr. Bradlaugh." But, in justice to that very persevering and able gentleman, we must allow that in his speech advocating consideration of the views of the Congress he told some plain truths to the Delegates, and gave them some very wholesomesound advice. "I am," he said, "of the stock of reformers; I am not of the stock of revolutionists. I plead to keep what our ancestors won; I plead (turning to the Delegates) to divide with you what we have got; but I plead to do it holding our own State high, and making it stronger, not by breaking either crown or sceptre, nor by the overthrow of throne, but by gradual progress from the bottom upward to freedom." This was excellent, but it is not exactly the method of redress and reform which the Bengali Babú agitator advocates in Press and on platform. Nor was there much encouragement to be derived from Mr. Bradlaugh's further very candid response to the Delegates' appeal for political enfranchisement:—"You Indian folk must win your freedom yourselves. We cannot give it you. All we can do is this: show us one fetter which binds you wrongfully, and we will help to break it; show us ignorance which hinders you, and we will try to give the means to right it, and teach till it no longer lives; show us some tax like that on salt, which leaves the beast thin and the people thinner, and we will try to remove it and deter those who would dare year after year to make war out of hungry people's bellies. But we are British; for right or wrong the British flag floats over India, and we can only give our help to her people in the hope that, forgetting all the shame and wrong in the past that has gone, they will help us to make our workers' condition easier, so that there shall be no need to keep British armies in India, but the peoples shall be their own armies." Now, with the exception of the little "high falutin" bit about the salt tax, whose incidence Mr. Bradlaugh evidently does not understand, there is nothing in the words quoted which might not have been spoken by any Englishman having the welfare of the peoples of India at heart. "We will help you if you help yourselves; but you must not ask too much. You must not embarrass us; we have much of misery and mischief in our midst to redress."

So spake the new member for India in concluding his forcible and eloquent harangue. If he work for India in this spirit he may be able to accomplish much good, and he will be supported by many who have no leaning towards the extreme views of the Congress agitators. But will he be the Member for India after the idea formed in the Babú agitator's heart? We opine not.

INVESTMENTS IN INDIA.

THOUGH circumstances have, as yet, prevented us from following on in sequence to the article on this subject in our issue of March 17th, the money market has, in the meantime, been good enough to endorse the conclusions we then set forth. Whilst many foreign and outlandish stocks and securities have been going "down amongst the dead men," Indian rupee stocks and other silver securities in sympathy therewith have gone up, if not by leaps and bounds, by very substantial percentages, quite sufficient to encourage those investors whom we advised to look to the East, instead of to every other point of the compass. The "depressed rupee" has proved, by its rise of from ten to twelve per cent., that it possesses some latent vitality, and has made the hearts of the great Uncovenanted to rejoice. It is safe to say that those who had courage to adopt our advice six weeks ago and apply their available floating capital to Indian stocks and well-selected companies in Bombay or Calcutta instead of scattering their savings in "that city" where, as Bob Sawyer's landlady remarked, "so many gentlemen are disappointed," will, even in this short time, have reaped the equivalent of two or three years' interest, while their capital remains intact and borne on a flowing tide. We are aware that in one respect the rise in the silver market cuts both ways. Thus, those who early in March sent remittances to India or invested in silver securities could obtain a greater number of rupees than they can now; but, as we have said, they can realise their profit at once if they do not care to persevere in that systematic, discriminating course of investment in India which we ventured to advise in comparison with investment in the overburdened joint-stock market here.

Referring, in passing, to our broader argument based on the chronic scarcity, and therefore better value, of capital in India, we may remind observers that the high bank rates have continued there with little intermission from 10 to 12 per cent., but at the date we write they have receded to 8 and 10 per cent. Many of the tea companies in Bengal have also had their annual meetings since we wrote, and the results have, on the average, been above those of trading companies here, and, subject to that careful selection that we advise, offer inducements from 6 to 10 per cent., besides allowing a wider margin for those who secure the stocks under par. For the present we need not enlarge on the subject; our claim just now is that the evidence of fact has come in, emphatically, to support our general arguments in favour of Indian investments.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season report for the past week:—Rain during week in one taluka of Poona, one of Bijapore and parts of Belgaum. Exotic cotton in two talukas of Dharwar blighted. Late crops in Satara, except gram, below average. Prospects of wheat and gram in Ahmednugger fair, and of jowari middling. Opium in Baroda good. Harvesting of late crops continues in most districts, and cotton picking in Guzerat, Southern Maharashtra Country and Baroda. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in several districts. Fodder scarce in two talukas of Khandeish and Dharwar, and one of Hyderabad, Nassik, Poona and Sholapore. Water scarce in one taluka of Nassik and one of Dharwar.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THREE more of the new type of six-inch breech-loading guns have been received in Bombay from England. There are now four, one having been already mounted on the defences.

THE Bareilly correspondent of the Pioneer writes:—"I omitted to mention that during his recent stay here Sir Frederick Roberts had the opportunity of seeing two squadrons of Rampur cavalry. His Excellency had not the time to hold a regular inspection of this body or men, but General Azimud-din Khan, of Rampur, paraded them before the Commander-in-Chief, who, I hear, was much struck with their general appearance and bearing."

THE Government of India have refused to sanction the appointment of Deputy Surgeon-General Donnelly to the post of Surgeon-General with the Government of Madras which has just fallen vacant by the retirement of Surgeon-General Bidie. The reason assigned has reference to the age-limit, Dr. Donnelly being now in his sixtieth year. The appointment will probably fall to Deputy Surgeon-General de Fabek, at present in medical charge of the Mandalay and Myingyan districts.

IT has been announced, the British troops in India are not, for the present, to be brought under the new system of musketry instruction which has proved so successful in the Native army. The reason given by the home authorities is, that it would be inadvisable to make any change, as the magazine rifle is about to be issued, and that further alterations will be required when the men have received their new weapon.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL STEWART has left Hyderabad. The Resident, in a valedictory order, speaks highly of the late Commandant of the Hyderabad Contingent, and alludes to the great efficiency and excellent discipline of the troops under his command, as also to the important reforms introduced by him which have marked an epoch in the history of the force. For himself personally Mr. Fitzpatrick desires to acknowledge the important assistance which he derived in a position for the most part novel to him from the counsel and support he received from General Stewart; and while he could not altogether regret a change which had resulted in General Stewart's promotion to a command of higher rank, he could not, on the other hand, avoid feeling the loss he would sustain in parting from an officer on whom he relied so much, and with whom his relations had been in all respects so pleasant.

"MILES," in the Times of India, remarks:—"Will the new local regiments receive their rates of pay sanctioned for the Punjab police in Burma, which was Rs. 14 per man?" and goes on to remark: "If so there will be plenty of recruits, but the battalions will be rather expensive. Government of late years have done a very great deal to better the position and improve the prospects of the Sepoys of the regular army, but have not touched his pay proper, which is still seven rupees a month. Nowadays Jack Sepoy has his half mounting, his free pass to and from his home when going on furlough, and many other privileges which he had not twenty years ago, and he is not at all badly off. But he looks upon the Burma pay as wealth, and if it is maintained as at present the new local regiments will not fail to be very popular."

THE new system of military accounts is anything but a blessing to officers going home. We hear from Bombay that the Paymaster's Office there was besieged by a number of officers from up-country who had been unable to obtain a last pay certificate before leaving their station. The system, or rather want of system, at present is that when an officer is going home he applies to the local treasury officer for a last pay certificate. This is then sent to the Pay Examiner in Calcutta who, on this first certificate, issues a second. This is then taken down to Bombay and presented to the Presidency Paymaster, who issues a third last pay certificate for presentation in London. Thus before an officer can leave India he has to obtain three last pay certificates, and if the date is early in the month—and in April holidays intervene—it becomes an impossibility to obtain one. We understand that a large number of officers have been most seriously inconvenienced, and that a representation is to be made on the subject to Government.

REGIMENTAL DISBANDMENTS.

In continuation of orders already issued, it has been notified that the regiments selected for localisation in Burma are the 10th, 12th, and 33rd Madras Infantry. The Native officers, non-commissioned officers and men at present serving in these corps will be disposed of either by transfer to the pension establishment, transfers to other corps, or be permitted to retire by receiving a gratuity, as the case may be, and their places will be taken by the Native officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Kubo Valley Police Battalion, the Chin Levy, and the Shan States Levy respectively. The present Native officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 10th Madras Infantry will be replaced by those of the Kubo Valley Police Battalion; those of the 12th M.I. by the Native officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Chin Levy, and those of the 33rd M.I. by the rank and file of the Shan States Levy, the whole three corps being brought up to the authorised strength, either by volunteers from other police battalions or by enlistment or recruits, care being taken to bring into each corps only men of the classes of which the corps will be composed. The necessary preliminary orders for carrying out these changes, the appointment of British officers to the reorganised 10th, 12th and 33rd Madras Infantry regiments, and the disposal of officers at present holding appointments in those regiments, will be issued by the local Government and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. The composition of the three new battalions will be:—(i.) The corps to be formed from the Kubo Valley Police Battalion, to consist of—three companies of Goorkhas and five companies of Assamese hill-men. (ii.) The Chin Levy to consist of—four companies of Sikhs and four companies of Punjabis, and (iii.) the Shan States Levy to be formed of—five companies of Sikhs and three of Punjabis. Hereafter Karens, Shans and Kachins may be enlisted for these corps. Each corps will be organised into eight companies, and will be of the following strength:—1 commandant, 2 wing commanders (the senior officer to be 2nd in command); 5 wing officers (of whom one will be adjutant and another quartermaster); 1 medical officer, 8 subedars (one of whom will be subedar-major), 8 jamedars (one of whom will be Native adjutant), 41 Havildars (including one havildar major), 40 naiks, 16 drummers or buglers, and 720 Sepoys.—Madras Times.

MONSIEUR NOUET, the Madras Mail understands, does not proceed on leave to France, as was previously announced, but remains in Pondicherry during the whole of the hot season. This change in his Excellency's arrangements is, it believes, due to the several questions of great local importance to the colony coming up within the next few months before the administration for discussion and disposal. Madame Nouet will, it is said, arrive in Pondicherry by a Messageries Maritimes mail steamer in October or November next.

CAPTAIN W. R. PRATT, Madras Railway Volunteers, died on the 9th inst. at the General Hospital, aged 42 years, from the after-effects of influenza. The deceased, who belonged to the Locomotive Department of the Madras Railway, had a severe attack of influenza a fortnight ago at Raichur, and his lungs becoming affected, he came to Madras, only to succumb to the sequelae of the epidemic. On Easter day he lost his eldest daughter, aged nineteen, from the same disease. Captain Pratt was a splendid shot, and carried away all the valuable prizes year after year at the South Indian Rifle Association Meetings.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. — See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleric Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO. Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, the Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE on India, Europe, the United States, and Canada are purchased and sold at the best current rates, and telegraphic remittances of Money made to all parts of India.

CIRCULAR NOTES and LETTERS OF CREDIT are issued for the use of Travellers.

The Agency of persons connected with India and the Colonies, or holding Foreign-office appointments, is undertaken on the usual terms, and includes the collection of Pay, Pensions, &c., the realisation of Dividends and Coupons, the receipt and forwarding of Letters, and information regarding the rules of the Services, with advice upon general subjects when required.

SUPPLY DEPARTMENT.

Orders are executed for every description of NAVAL and MILITARY APPOINTMENTS and CLOTHING, MESS SUPPLIES, including Wines, Provisions, Plate, Glass, China, Cutlery, Arms, Accoutrements, Band Instruments, &c., and all kinds of household and personal requisites, at the lowest prices. A comprehensive ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE will be forwarded on application. No orders for goods will be executed at Catalogue prices unless accompanied by remittances for their cost.

Special attention is given to the regular despatch of Newspapers and Periodicals, a Price List of which will be furnished to applicants.

New and Second-hand Books are supplied to Clubs and private individuals on advantageous terms; also Stationery for office and private use.

PASSAGE AND FORWARDING DEPARTMENT.

This Department undertakes the selection of Berths by mail or other steamers, suitable vessels being recommended and passages secured at owner's rates, without charge for Commission.

Intending passengers are invited to send their addresses to MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., who will forward free of charge a copy of their "Traveller's Guide." Personal baggage Collected, Shipped, and Insured.

Passengers leaving England receive the personal attention of MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., or their representatives.

Passengers Homeward are received on arrival at the various docks by the representatives of MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., and especial attention is paid to Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO.'s clerks meet the steamers of the P. and O. and other Lines, on arrival at Plymouth, Gravesend, and the Docks, to receive instructions and render such assistance as passengers may require.

Passengers' Baggage and Packages not immediately required may be stored in a dry Warehouse kept for that purpose, at a moderate rent, and facilities are afforded for examination when desired.

Goods, Baggage, and Parcels of every description are received for despatch to all parts of the world, or cleared and forwarded to their destination, in accordance with instructions.

Forms of Declaration for Customs and insurance are furnished on application.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your troy efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish! Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 12, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 23rd April; and from Calcutta to the 22nd April.

BEFORE leaving Dehra the Viceroy inspected the 2nd Battalion 2nd Gurkhas on their return from Lushailand. His Excellency then visited the tea garden of Kowlagarh, belonging to the Maharaja of Nahun. The whole process of tea manufacture was seen, from the gathering of the green leaf to the making of a cup of tea.

THE arrangements for holding the Northern Lushais in check for the next six months has now been completed. Fort Aijal is to be garrisoned by 200 rifles of the Frontier Police, and a reserve of 100 men will be stationed at Changsil. The heliograph is to be laid to the latter post, which is in telegraphic communication with Fort Aijal. The Lushais have suspended hostilities, being now engaged in clearing ground for their annual crops.

A SUCCESSFUL reconnaissance of the hitherto unexplored country to the south of Haka has been made by Brigadier-General Symons. The Chins who were met with during the march of sixty miles were friendly, and the Chiefs willingly tendered their submission. It has still to be seen whether a better route for the Bengal-Burma road can be found than that from Haka to Demagiri.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN is still away at Apozai dealing with the troubles which have arisen there. The date of his return to Quetta has not yet been intimated, but it is expected that he will remain away another month.

MR. FITZPATRICK, Resident at Hyderabad, has gone to Ootacamund for the hot weather.

GENERAL Tregear has returned to his headquarters, having completed the Koladyne-Haka road.

COLONEL GATACRE having returned from Upper Burma, where he was officiating in command of the Mandalay District, has taken up his substantive post of Deputy Quartermaster-General at Army headquarters.

A LARGE fire occurred at Taungdwingyi, in Lower Burma, on the night of April 15th. It originated in the jail warders' quarters. The jail was untouched, and the prisoners remained quite quiet, none escaping. The jail quarter-guard, the telegraph and post offices and a good many barracks, the bazaars, the military mess and parts of the village were burnt down, altogether about 500 houses.

THE last Burma violent crime report published is for the fourth quarter of 1889. It shows a large decrease in dacoity, and a 29 per cent. decrease in all violent crime. In Lower Burma the cases of violent crime amounted to 176 as against 252 for the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

A SURVEY for a line of railway between Jubbulpur and Nagpur is to be undertaken, Mr. W. H. Parker being in charge.

A TUNNEL was effected between the working parties in the Khojak Tunnel on April 17th, and the Khawja Amran range has now been successfully pierced. The total length of the tunnel is 12,600 feet, of which over one-half has already been arched in with masonry. The diff-culties which have had to be met may be estimated from the fact that some twenty thousand tons of water have now to drain off through the small six-inch hole which connects the two headings.

AN unsuccessful attempt was made a few days ago by a couple of Mahomedans to murder the Dewan of Cambay, whose servants are believed to be implicated in the crime.

A MAHOMEDAN merchant, charged with forging bills on the Bombay branch of the Bank of Bengal, has been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. The amount of his fraudulent operations was Rs. 50,000.

H.E. LORD HARRIS has accepted the Honorary Colonelcy of the Bombay Rifle Volunteers.

MURREE, as well as Simla, is threatened with water-famine.

KYANTON, the most important of the Southern Shan States, has accepted the conditions of Government, which should prevent its being absorbed by either China or Siam.

THE Lushai Chief Vantura escaped from his prison at Tregear on the 17th April.

THE Government of India has been asked to sanction the temporary appointment of Lieut.-Colonel R. Westmacott, commanding 21st Bombay Pioneers, as military adviser to H.H. the Gaekwar of Baroda.

TEN THOUSAND mill-workers assembled at Mahaluxmee on April 19th, and protested against the proposal to close Bombay mills for eight days in the month.

DEFALCATIONS to the extent of about six lakhs of rupees are reported to have been discovered in the Calcutta branch of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China.

MR. NEY ELIAS, the British Commissioner with the Siam Boundary Commission, has arrived in Calcutta from Rangoon. The remainder of his colleagues follow shortly.

MR. GEORGE BELLETT, Inspector of Schools, Rajshahi Division, Bengal, has been allowed two years' extension of service, with effect from October next, when he would otherwise have been superannuated under the fifty-five years' rule.

FROM Calcutta, in February last, 583 Natives of India sailed to try their fortune in Fiji. More than 300 hailed from the North-West Provinces, and about 100 each from Behar and Oudh. For some reason Bengalis of the poorer class are unwilling to cross the sea, and even the money-making Ooriyas who take steamer from Chandbally by thousands for Calcutta, show no disposition to go to Fiji, writes the Englishman. Eighty-seven of the whole number were Brahmins of a poor class, and sixty-nine were Mohamedans. Men and women were in the proportion of a hundred to forty. The bulk of the emigrants were between twenty and forty years of age; only one was over forty; fifty were children between two and ten years of age; and twenty were infants.

MONEY is very scarce in Calcutta. Last week one of the exchange banks applied to the Comptroller-General for a loan, at proper interest, of four lakhs of rupees on the security of bullion deposited in the Mint, but not assayed. The loan was refused. The Mint has not been able to work full tide of late owing to an outbreak of influenza among the employes.

No more shooting parties will be admitted into Nepal for the next four years, owing to the scarcity of big game, which, in the interests of sport, it is considered, should be preserved.

ON the night of April 22nd the cotton press of Harvey, Sabapathy Moodliar and Company (Limited), of Bombay, was destroyed by fire, estimated loss rupees fifteen thousand. The property is partly covered by insurance.

MURREE, as well as Simla, is threatened this year with a water famine, says the Lahore paper. Owing to there being no rain during the last winter, snow, it seems, has not fallen in abundance, and all the channels appear to be dry. The troops have not arrived, yet the inhabitants of the place (both European and Native) are said to experience a good deal of trouble in getting pure water. The Murree Depôt is at present occupied by a mere handful of troops, but it is expected that within a few days they will be reinforced by 450 men. Under these circumstances the sanitary outlook is hardly of the brightest.

On the 19th April news was received at Secunderabad from the station-master of Madira, that the body of Major Langley, R.E., of Bezwadat, had been brought in killed by a tiger. He had been out at Kulloor shikaring, and there was no one with him. Madira is a few stations from Bezwada, and Kulloor some twenty or thirty miles off the line.

MR. T. CAMPION, Auditor, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, who had visited Benares last week to check accounts, died there on 20th April from pneumonia following influenza.

Two Surgeons-Major, stationed at Cannanore, died on 20th April within a few hours of each other of influenza, with other complications. Both were young men—Messrs. Kernan and Quarry.

NOTES.

THE latest news from India and Burma is by wire up to last night, and will be found in the telegrams from the Times correspondents, which we reproduce. The news by the Overland Mail is up to the 25th ult., and is quiet and uneventful.

THE chief excitement has been regarding the state of the silver market. According to the Bombay papers the ups-and-downs of sterling exchange during the week that the mail left would fill a volume, such has been the excitement brought about by speculation in silver in the London markets.

OF course, every one who has suffered from the depreciated rupee would rejoice to see it go up again in value, nearer to its old form of two shillings; but it is a question whether we shall be indebted to our American cousins for bringing about this boon. An important series of articles in Blackwood on the Indian currency question has evidently attracted the attention of Anglo-Indian readers of that magazine, one of whom writes to a financial contemporary advocating with the magazine writer that the Government of India should close the mints to silver so long as the exchange banks which must remit to India play off the low priced silver bullion against Council bills, and so beat down the rupee.

THE Anglo-Indian says:—"This little game has been played for all it is worth. It has reduced the Government of India to the verge of bankruptcy. It goes without saying that, having had its eyes opened to the colossal blunder of allowing the banks to play football with its currency, the Government is anxiously waiting the rise which American legislation will cause in order to retrace its steps, and keep the rupee in future at about 2s. 0½d. The balance of trade being always in favour of India the rupee should be always a little over 2s." It should be no doubt—but. Unfortunately there is as much virtue or otherwise in a "but" as in an "if"; but as the writer insists that we are on the eve of great changes we can only hope that the change will be for the better, so far as the value of the rupee is concerned.

THE influenza epidemic appears to have been a very serious one throughout India. Several Europeans have succumbed to it, and the mortality has been considerable amongst the Natives. In Southern India it is reported that there is scarcely a Native house in which there is not a case, and that of a severe type, too; while at Simla there have been ten deaths amongst the Native clerks since the offices arrived there for this season.

THE Pioneer gives the following as the correct list of the representative witnesses who have been chosen to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons regarding the grievances of the Uncovenanted Services:—Public Works Department: Mr. F. L. O'Callaghan, Mr. Claude Vincent, and Mr. G. H. D. Walker; Telegraphs: Mr. Pitman and Mr. Hill; Police, Mr. J. Lambert, Mr. Turton Smith, and Mr. Goldsmid; Accountant-General's Department: Mr. Hesketh Biggs; Opium Department: Mr. Tytler; Educational: Sir A. Croft; and Mr. John Eliot, of the Meteorological Department. These are the witnesses who will proceed from India to England; there are a number of other officers already on leave at home who will give evidence.

MR. BRADLAUGH, in his paper the National Reformer, makes much boast of the number of petitions he is receiving from Natives in India in favour of the elective principle and against Lord Cross's India Council Bill. An Indian contemporary remarks on this matter:—"Petitions hold a high place in this country. From the schoolboy who wishes a holiday to the farmer who wants the Viceroy to reduce his taxes the people have great faith in the power of the petition. It is, therefore, no wonder that the vernacular papers should conceive the idea of presenting monster petitions to Parliament. The ideas of the Hindustan, an Oudh paper, on this subject are sublime. "The only way," it says, "to frustrate Lord Cross's India Council Bill is to make the table of the House of Commons creak under the weight of a cartload of petitions. If only 100,000 patriotic men in different parts of the country undertake the task they can have no difficulty in preparing 100,000 petitions and getting them signed by a large number of people."

A PETITION from some inhabitants of St. Thomas's Mount, near Madras, complains of a decision to make the place a Municipality and impose taxes. The complainants say:—"In further illustration of their miserable circumstances your petitioners beg leave to state that some of them who carry on a small merchandise in the bazaars go very early in the morning daily, sit there the whole day moping, and come home at a late hour in the evening with a depressed and broken heart by not being able to earn as much as a single rupee a day towards profit for want of sales, and they consequently find it impossible to meet the ordinary necessities of life and to maintain their cumbersome families." An inquiry into the matter, says a local paper, will undoubtedly prove this assertion. It is not at all understood what necessity there was for the introduction of the Municipal Act in this cantonment, without even allowing the people an opportunity of having their own say just at a time when their condition stands at a very low ebb, while such a proposal was not thought of for the last 100 years after the formation of this cantonment.

"ALREADY," says the Calcutta Englishman, "the shower of bogus telegrams in favour of 'Mr. Bradlaugh's Bill' has begun. We are gratuitously informed by telegram of 'a very large and representative meeting of Akola District,' at which a petition supporting Mr. Bradlaugh's Bill was adopted. We are prepared to hear from our Babu friends that 'monstrous' and enthusiastic meetings have also been held at Tangail, Munshiganj, Habibpur, and other centres of political enlightenment. A Hindu gentleman, writing to a Madras paper recently, summed up the present agitation with perfect accuracy. 'I should have been glad if one of the fruits of the Congress movement was to give an impulse to a systematic and diligent study of the economical and political conditions of the country. I see no evidence of this; but what I see is a growing tendency to make speeches which are not worth reading, to draw away schoolboys from their legitimate field of labour, and to manufacture misleading telegrams regarding the character and influence of mass meetings.' In Bengal, ingenuity has got beyond this point—telegrams are concocted regarding purely imaginary meetings."

THE Bombay Gazette pays a well-deserved tribute to Sir George Birdwood for his very able article in the Asiatic Quarterly Review, to which we have already drawn attention:—"Sir George Birdwood, in his article in the Asiatic Quarterly, tells us more in a short compass than any recent writer on leprosy has communicated. There is an encyclopædic fullness of knowledge characteristic of so careful an observer and so exhaustive an inquirer, and the article may be commended as an example of the best methods of dealing with a subject, concerning which we fear there is much more of morbidly timid sentiment in the public mind than of knowledge."

THE following from Saturday's Vanity Fair is not kind:—"In reports of debates in the House of Commons, the Member for the Kirkcaldy Burghs, Sir George Campbell, is generally alluded to as 'the Hon. Baronet.' The standard reference books, by some strange agreement amongst themselves, are all without an allusion to the date of creation of the Baronetcy, merely stating that this much-dreaded orator is a Knight Commander of the Star of India, which order was conferred on him for services as a Pro-Consul in Bengal."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 11.

I mentioned a fortnight ago that the collector of income-tax in Calcutta had called upon the agents to make a return of profits on goods consigned to them for sale by persons residing outside of India, and that the Chamber of Commerce had requested the Government to direct the withdrawal of the order. The Government has replied that the purport of its former letter on the subject has been misapprehended; that there is no intention of reconsidering the question at present; that the local authorities have been instructed to cause the profits on such consignments to be assessed; and that it proposes to defer further consideration of the matter, should such be found necessary, pending the receipt of reports on the operation of the order.

This decision has caused great discontent, and a meeting of representatives of several public associations was held at the Chamber of Commerce on Friday, at which it was resolved to ask the Government to suspend action pending the receipt of memorials to the Viceroy which are now in course of preparation. The tone of the collector's circular excites much comment, especially that portion which directs the agents, if unable to estimate the profits, to furnish a return of the gross proceeds of the consignments in order that the collector may himself estimate what percentage is to be treated as profit. The result is likely to be a renewal of the agitation against the income-tax as a whole, on the ground that the reasons by which its reimposition was justified in 1886 have disappeared, and that its operation has become most inquisitorial and oppressive. If such an agitation is started all classes and races will join, for there can be no doubt of the general unpopularity of the tax.

A most extraordinary document has been going the round of the Indian Press lately. It is a circular letter signed by the Hon. Mr. Moore and three other senior members of the Bombay Civil Service, and is addressed to all Bombay civilians of over ten years' standing. Although only published within the last few days, it was issued months ago, while Lord Reay's guarantee to the corrupt Mamludars was under the consideration of the Supreme Government. It invites each civilian to address to the Secretary of State a separate memorial supporting Lord Reay's action.

Such an attempt to induce the Civil Service to combine in opposition to the supreme authority is unprecedented and in direct contravention of the orders against combinations by Government servants. It sets an example to the Civil Service of abandoning an attitude of neutrality and of interfering in politics, and it aids the Native political associations which have been trying to force the Secretary of State and the Viceroy to reverse orders passed after full consideration. It is hardly conceivable that Lord Reay could have sanctioned this ill-judged attempt to support him, but it is a strange fact that shortly before his departure he appointed Mr. Moore a member of the Council over the heads of seniors, and also promoted the three other gentlemen who signed the circular.

The Times of India, commenting on Sir J. Gorst's remark in the House of Commons that Lord Reay's farewell speech must have been misreported, says there can be no question of the accuracy of the report, as the speech, being important, happened to be a written one, and Lord Reay emphatically repeated what he had deliberately written—namely, that he tendered his resignation when he conceived the action of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State to be a breach of the Queen's proclamation.

The petition of the Mahomedan Patriotic Association against the introduction of elective institutions now numbers over 36,000 signatures from all parts of Upper India. A document attached to the list of signatures received by the association from Battalah in the Punjab throws a curious light upon the methods employed by the Congress wire-pullers to get the ignorant classes to sign the counter petitions which they are preparing. It runs thus:—

"We, the undersigned inhabitants of Battalah who signed this petition have also signed a petition brought round by Swami Ala Ram, which was stated to contain a request that the Government should exempt us from taxes, especially those on cattle. Swami Ala Ram and his coadjutors told us that the object of the petition was the remission of taxes. We are all quite opposed to the proposals of the National Congress, and very gladly sign this petition."

Hope, a Native paper published in Calcutta, referring to the meetings and petitions of the agitators, says that if honesty or the good opinion of the public were among the requirements of the agitation its conductors would not dare to pass in broad daylight as the firm conviction of a people what is transparently the manufactured opinion of a few ringleaders. It adds that it shudders to think of the way in which the elective system would be manipulated by such hands as theirs, so expert in making that appear which is not.

An incident which occurred in Bombay last week shows the urgent necessity of legislation on the leper question. Six lepers were found begging in the municipal market. Four escaped, but two were arrested and brought before the magistrate. They were in such a state that the Natives would not approach them, and they were not taken into court, but were placed under a tree outside while a magistrate conducted the trial from the verandah. The magistrate held that he could not compel them to go to a leper asylum, and sentenced them to one day's imprisonment.

The Chinese Amban left Darjeeling for Lhasa on the 3rd inst. The garrison lined the road, and a salute was fired.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 10.

The Rangoon Times announces that the territory of Wuntho Tsawbwa is to be invaded and annexed, owing to the repeated Dacoit raids from this Tsawbwaship into British territory. This announcement is, at any rate, premature, as the local Government is at present opposed to annexing the district. The real facts appear to be that a Dacoit chief, named Ngamat, has collected a strong band of Dacoits within Wuntho's territory, and has become too strong for the Tsawbwa. He has committed numerous depredations in British territory. The Chief Commissioner has directed the Deputy Commissioner of Katha to take measures to break up Ngamat's band.

The Wuntho territory is now practically independent. It lies east of Bhamo, extending from the Kachyen Hills southward to the Shwebo and Upper Chindwin districts.

Theebaw Tsawbwa has withdrawn his resignation.

The rains have set in unusually early. The monsoon broke on the 7th inst.

The surrender of several small Dacoit bands is announced. Amongst those who surrendered was one of Boh Shway's sons, the most famous of all the leaders who opposed us after the annexation.

No. 7 Bengal Mountain Battery, commanded by Captain Triscott, left Rangoon yesterday for India. This battery, which has served in Burma since February, 1887, has done singularly good work. It has visited all parts of Burma from the Jade Mines to the Siamese frontier and the Salwen River, and from the Chin Hills to the Ruby Mines. It has visited the furthest points reached by the British troops. During its service in Burma the battery lost ten killed in action and 30 from sickness out of 200 men.

SIAM.

RANGOON, MAY 10.

It is reported that the Siamese are again returning to the Maukme territory, which they were recently compelled to leave by the Delimitation Commission.

Considerable soreness exists in Bangkok, owing to the difficulties which have arisen in connection with the delimitation of the frontier.

THE INDIA COUNCILS BILL.

("DAILY NEWS" TELEGRAMS.)

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

Several Hindoo papers express disapproval of the aims of the Indian Congress. Hope, a paper published here says:—"The fact is, the agitators live completely within and for themselves, and upon the stupidity of those who may be found to act as their dupes. There is nothing wrong in the elective system which they are so eager to possess; but we shudder to think of the way in which the privilege would be manipulated by such experts in making that appear which is not."

A Native correspondent writes to The Statesman:—"I went myself from door to door to get signatures to a petition to Parliament praying for representative government. The people stared at me at the mention of the words, 'Legislative Councils.' They had no idea of the thing, and seemed in doubt as to whether it might be a tiger or a buffalo."

INDIAN SILVER AND THE HALL MARKS.

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

The leading jewellers here declare that the compulsory hall-marking of Indian silver-work will injure the industry, which is widely scattered, and in the hands of petty traders. European firms use rupee standard silver, but Native workmen often use eleven and even nine annas silver.

ALCOHOL IN INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

At the Provincial Conference at Poona this week a proposal was submitted and obtained several votes, though not carried, that the Government should be requested to declare the use of alcohol an offence punishable by imprisonment and whipping. The Provincial Conference is an offshoot of the Indian Congress.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INDIA'S CATTLE.

(Madras Times.)

For the sake of brevity we use the word "cattle" to refer not only to kine and buffaloes, but also to goats and sheep. For modern practical purposes it is essential that the subject chosen should be considered not merely from an Indian point of view, but from the standpoint of the meat-consumer. Every year there is a decrease in cattle population caused by the demands of flesh-eaters, and this is now so serious an item that it cannot be excluded from the calculations of men desirous of studying India's capabilities in comparison with her needs. Cattle are wanted as workers, and as food and manure providers. In several distinct branches they serve a useful purpose, and if agriculture is to improve so as to make this country rich, each of these branches must be studied, and the quantity and quality of cattle available must be maintained. India is tropical, and, perhaps for this reason, it pleases some people to say that manures are not required in this country. Large areas of country have doubtless produced satisfactory crops for a long period without direct application of manure, but as Mr. W. R. Robertson recently pointed out, "such land has invariably received regular and full supplies of manure annually, in the silt left by the irrigation water." The annual transference of large quantities of soil from one area of land to another benefits the latter at the expense of the former. Then, again, farm stock is wanted for purposes of labour. Without his bullock the ryot cannot till his soil properly, nor can the produce of his exertions be satisfactorily conveyed from the field of production to the market. For manuring purposes and for purposes of labour it is essential that the stock of cattle should be kept up, yet it appears to be a fact that it is yearly diminishing in numbers. It is but natural that the influence of Western teaching should at first be defective. The ryot is urged to produce saleable crops in increasing quantities. To do this he is apt to neglect pasture, and gradually, as he ceases to sow grass, roots and fodder crops, the ever lessening supplies of food for his stock will compel him to reduce his stock. On the one hand, he increases the area of his arable land, which requires manure; on the other, he restricts his supplies of those fertilisers that science tells us are so necessary. The ryot has yet to learn that he must not push in one direction while neglecting to extend also along other lines closely connected with the goal of his exertions.

Not only does the ryot fail to see that, to keep his land in good order and to get his work well done, he must keep a proper supply of cattle, and that to do this he must provide a fair supply of cattle food; but he seems actually content to see his cattle around him half-starved. It is recorded in official reports: The cattle in most parts are half-starved. One of the saddest sights in India, as we travel for hundreds of miles by rail, in the second quarter of the rainless months, is to see the cattle standing without food and almost without shade, exposed to a scorching heat in the midst of arid plains bare of sustenance. The strength of the cattle decreases and mortality increases. Cattle are said to die by thousands. Left to their own resources to find food, they have to go on half-rations at best, and frequently they are starved into disease and death. During a famine year the loss is of course unusually heavy, and the attempts made to show that these losses are speedily recouped are not, in our opinion, successful. In 1877, a tract in the Deccan had about 25,000 head of cattle, having increased to this figure from 19,000 in 1851. According to a settlement report in 1878, there were only 15,000, but in 1888 the number had picked up to 20,000. This, however, is not quite a fair report from which to deduce the probable average rate of progress in population. After a famine nature provides a reaction. In times of scrow and misery among human beings, population increases at an abnormal ratio. So it is also, probably, with animals. It is in times of apparent plenty and real neglect, in days when the ryot thrives and takes more and more work out of his cattle, while finding no more food and no more care for them, that India's cattle suffer, and that the road is opened for a subsequent reaction to agricultural slackness. It has been said by a Native writer that on the average in India there is only one pair of bullocks to 12 acres of land under crops; in the North-West, 1 pair to 10 acres; in Bombay, 1 to 24 acres; in the Southern part of the Deccan, 1 to 32 acres. And Sir James Caird has expressed the opinion that no less than 700,000 acres are lying idle for want of plough cattle. Sheep and goats are not of so much importance to Indian agriculture, and the former cannot be reared in all parts of the country. What the ryot has to aim at is to improve the cattle that are most needful to his work, and to bear in mind that care bestowed upon them will be richly rewarded in course of time.

THE EXCISE PROBLEM.

(Pioneer.)

The despatch of the Government of India in defence of their excise administration is not solely devoted to demolishing the facts and figures of Mr. Caine and Mr. Samuel Smith. In it is embodied a store of valuable information, showing how the present policy in regard to the liquor traffic has been fashioned and shaped, and how great are the difficulties that still beset it. It is frankly admitted that there have been mistakes in the past: notably in the case of Bengal during the period 1877-84, when the out-still system was extended; but it is strongly denied that the Government have systematically increased the facilities for drinking with a view to obtain a larger amount of revenue. Looking at this excise question as a whole, and after due consideration of the mass of evidence collected during the past six months, we can only repeat the conclusion enunciated in a previous article that the indictment against the Government of India has crumbled to pieces, and that the policy which is now in vogue is justified by the experience gained in various parts of the country. The highest possible taxation on liquors and drugs; the suitable regulation of the traffic in connection with police work; and the limitation of the number of shops; these are the three cardinal principles which the authorities have adopted. To them must now be added greater attention in ascertaining the existence of local public sentiment, so that deference may be paid to any clearly marked opinion against the granting of licenses in particular districts. The abolition of the out-still system is being carried into effect wherever it is practicable to do so, and the introduction of the central distillery plan in its simplest form, by which illicit consumption can be directly regulated, is strongly insisted upon. We ourselves fail to see what more could be done: there is admittedly a demand for spirituous liquors in the country, and the classes who consume them will gratify their tastes somehow. The regulation of this traffic on the lines laid down cannot assuredly be denounced as tending to demoralise the people, for in the words of the Government despatch:—"Every excise system in force in British India does, at any rate in some degree, check drinking, inasmuch as it limits the number of places at which liquor may be purchased, restricts sale within certain hours, and raises the cost of liquor by imposing duty on it."

WANT OF INITIATIVE.

(Englishman.)

It is a matter of general remark that the Natives of India, however highly they are educated, produce nothing really original in literature or science. This is certainly surprising when it is remembered that, besides an ancient literature of the East, they have now for a long time had free access to that of the West. It is not, however, in these branches of knowledge alone that originality is conspicuous by its absence; the same phenomenon is to be found in arts and manufactures. If it be indeed true that necessity is the mother of invention, it might be reasonably argued that this state of things is a sign that the Natives of India are well off. Though the small ryots and the labouring classes cannot be called rich, still the absence of a Poor Law indicates that there need not here be the same terror of poverty as there is in Europe. Nevertheless, not to this cause can the absence of inventions be attributed so much as to the want of industrial schools, and indeed of all education not required for training persons for Government service of the Bar. Inventiveness and enterprise naturally go hand in hand. If these existed in a greater degree and with more force than at present, some practical benefits might be confidently expected in an insanitary town like Calcutta. For instance everybody knows that the crowding of human beings, and of any other animals equally with the human, renders life unhealthy, both by exhausting the pure part of the atmosphere and by increasing the impure portion. It is not so easy to decrease the number of human residents of a town, but science and enterprise can do much to reduce the crowding of quadruped inhabitants. Thus, electric trams, as in the east of London, dispense with the necessity for horses, and similarly large dairies in the country would greatly diminish the number of cows now in the town. This last plan seems such an exceedingly simple one, and might apparently be made so lucrative withal, that it is marvellous it should not have been long ago adopted on a gigantic scale. With honest supervision, necessary buildings and machinery, and the modern appliances of science for preserving milk and butter in the hottest climate, a company might surely venture to compete with the Calcutta gowalas with confidence of success. In most parts of the Mofussil milk sells at 16 seers per rupee, or, quite unadulterated, at 12 seers, and, roughly speaking, half a seer yields an ounce of butter, or, in other words, the outturn is a chatak per seer. The dairy company might keep it own cows, or buy milk from cultivators, or perhaps both, but at first it would probably be advisable to only buy, otherwise their cattle might die mysteriously. Even now in a small way butter is manufactured by a private firm at Nowadih, on the East Indian Railway, and sent to Calcutta at a profit; but this butter is said to be unsuitable to European taste from being slightly tainted with smoke. A big dairy much nearer than Nowadih, and sending milk and cream as well as butter to the Metropolis, should secure its owners a handsome profit, while doing much to render life in Calcutta safer and pleasanter.

ANGLO-INDIAN CELEBRITIES AT HOME.—III.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

(Times of India.)

It is ten years almost to a day since Sir Richard Temple, eschewing the delights of supreme authority in Bombay with its £10,000 a year, fled post-haste to England and cast himself into the thick of the turmoil and excitement of a general election, only to suffer defeat at the hands of the fickle-minded bucolics of his native country, whose suffrages he solicited. Those ten years have not been uneventful ones in the career of the veteran Anglo-Indian administrator, but, on the whole, they sit very lightly on his head. The sturdy figure, with its strongly-marked physiognomy, which is perhaps the most familiar presence in the Lobby and Committee rooms of the House of Commons, is very much the same with which visitors to Malabar Point and Gunesh Khind a decade ago were so intimately acquainted. A close observer might perhaps, detect a symptom of advancing age in the lines on the face or the slight stoop in the shoulders, but, to all intents and purposes, in outward appearance the Sir Richard Temple of to-day is the Sir Richard Temple as Bombay knew him in days of yore. We say advisedly in outward appearance, for, so far as other things go, the present member for the Evesham Division of Worcestershire is a very different person to the whilom Governor of Bombay. English public life has worked a marvellous change in his composition. From a bureaucrat of a somewhat despotic type he has been transformed into a party politician of the most approved English pattern. Government authority, it is true, is still with him a sort of fetish, and he would as soon think of going against the powers that be as setting himself in opposition to the Divine will; but in carrying out the duties of a member of Parliament as they are understood in these days of King Demos, he is not surpassed by the most experienced of his fellows, who have been all their life accustomed to the freedom of home politics. No one can be more assiduous than he in practising the blandishments which help to make a member popular. Whether it is in securing a seat in the gallery for some constituent, showing a bevy of fair rustics over the House of Commons, or assisting at a tea fight or flower show on his native heather, he is always the obedient servant of his approved good masters. It is a great change from the pomp and circumstance of official life in India, where a Governor of a Presidency is a dazzling orb in a brilliant constellation, before whose radiance all bow, and that Sir Richard Temple has been able to make it with so little difficulty shows an adaptiveness which few in the old days would have given him credit for.

The fact is that Sir Richard Temple has taken very kindly to home life. It cost him, perhaps, somewhat of a pang to forego the privileges and distinction incidental to high official position in India and to take his place as one of the crowd, but having done so, he has found much enjoyment in the career opened out to him on the London School Board and in the House of Commons. Between the two he finds his time fully occupied, and continuous employment to one of his active temperament is the very breath of life. So far as the House of Commons is concerned, he is a useful rather than a distinguished member. There is no other member of the present Parliament who can boast his record of attendance. The tinkle of the division bell never fails to bring him into the Ministerial fold, and night in night out throughout the Session he may be found within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster. He is not one of those who look upon the House of Commons as the best club in London, and use it accordingly. Mr. Labouchere rarely numbers him amongst the select audience who listen to his armchair discourses in the smoking-room, and he is not to be found amongst the convives who form select parties for the enjoyment of the gastronomic delights of the Legislative brethren. Parliamentary work is a serious business to Sir Richard Temple, and he throws himself into it with all the earnestness and ardour that characterised his official work in India. The utmost indulgence he allows himself is a gossip in the Lobby with his fellow-members, or a little agreeable relaxation with a party of his lady friends, who may have secured admission to the House through his good offices. But even on these occasions he never forgets that he is a legislator, with important duties to perform. A Committee meeting has more powerful attractions for him than the liveliest conversation, and the summons of the Whips secures from him implicit obedience, however charming he may find his company.

In the House itself Sir Richard Temple is content, for the most part, to play the rôle of a listener. When he first entered Parliament, like many other men unacquainted with the temper of the House, he made the mistake of intervening too frequently in debate, and was in danger of being classed with the bores of the Sir George Campbell type, the sound of whose voice is always enough to empty the benches about him. But he saw his error in time, and wisely reserved his eloquence for those special occasions when Indian affairs are discussed, on which an expression of opinion from him is appropriate and valued accordingly. The consequence is that to-day there is no private member who is more respectfully listened to, or whose utterances command greater weight. Nor is this at all surprising. Close upon forty years' service in India in every position of importance, but the very highest, has given Sir Richard Temple an unrivalled opportunity of making himself acquainted with the needs and peculiarities of our great Eastern Empire, and a natural literary bent enables him to present information so obtained in an interesting and attractive form. There was a striking instance of his capacity for making a usually dull subject lively not very long since. Mr. Caine and some other fanatical teetotallers had made one of their characteristic onslaughts on the Indian Abkari administration, drawing in lurid colours the evils which it was supposed to have wrought by making temperate people of India familiar with the seductive fascinations of strong drink. Something more than the usual amount of exaggeration was used in depicting the primitive innocence of the Indian people before a base and mercenary British officialdom for their own sordid purposes tempted them from the paths of virtue, and the accents of indignant protest were pitched in a somewhat higher key than ordinary, because the chief speaker had recently visited India for a few weeks, and desired to impress his hearers with the vastness of his knowledge. It devolved upon Sir Richard Temple to reply, and instead of conducting the House through a maze of argument based on official reports, which they would but imperfectly understand, he made a diverting excursion into the Eastern classics, and showed by quotations from the Vedas and from other sacred writings, that, so far from our having initiated the Natives of India into the mysteries of alcoholic drink, we are but tyros in the business as compared with them. When our race was in its cradle Indians were quaffing strong drink under the shadow of their palms, and enjoying the felicity of going intoxicated to bed at nights. The House dearly loves to witness the demolition of pretentious windbags who under cover of superior morality, take up the parable against hardworking British officials in distant quarters of the globe, and it laughed till its sides ached as the distinguished Anglo-Indian champion exposed the ignorance of Messrs. Caine, Smith, and Co., and the flimsiness of the superstructure upon which their case against the Indian Abkari Department was built. Unfortunately, however, only a small proportion of the members heard Sir Richard Temple's speech, and the fear of the teetotal societies in the country being strong upon most of them the voting was not exactly what could have been wished. Nevertheless, the speech raised Sir Richard Temple greatly in the estimation of his fellows, and henceforward no debate on the Indian liquor question will be deemed complete without its intervention.

Great as has been Sir Richard Temple's progress in the House, it is in the Committee-rooms that he has made his greatest mark. His wide experience of administrative questions, his devotion to his public duties, and his strong common sense have all marked him out as eminently fitted for the work which is done outside the Legislative Chamber; and with that unerring sagacity which distinguishes those to whom the duty of constituting a committee or commission is entrusted, he is invariably selected for membership on any body where the duties are unusually responsible, and the questions to be decided of more than average intricacy. Thus it was that he alone of private members of Parliament came to be a member of the Army and Navy Commission, of which Lord Hartington was President. That body had under consideration some of the most momentous problems that could possibly be referred to any organisation outside the Government—questions involving a possible revolution of our military and naval systems, and going to the very root of our constitution. How the Commission performed its work all the world now knows. After prolonged deliberation and hearing much evidence it recommended many sweeping reforms. Sir Richard Temple's part in the work is to be gathered from the report. He took what may be described as the cautious Conservative view of the matter, and, whilst agreeing in the main with his colleagues, was averse to some of their more drastic proposals. Whether he is right in his views time alone will show; but there is this to be said for them, that they reflect a considerable body of opinion outside, and are far more likely to be adopted than the recommendations to which Lord Randolph Churchill appends his signature. Privately Sir Richard expresses his satisfaction at the condition in which he found things. Public rumour had prepared him for many grave abuses and widespread disorganisation, and he was agreeably surprised to find that, on the whole, the administration of our army and navy is well looked after. He was much better pleased with the Admiralty than the Horse Guards. To his mind there is no body, excepting the Government of India, which is so powerfully organised, or which is capable of achieving greater results.

Of Sir Richard Temple's School Board we have left ourselves little space to speak, yet to omit noticing it would be to leave the picture incomplete. It is, indeed, in connection with the School Board that he is best known to the world at large. As the Finance Minister of the great organisation which looks after the educational needs of the metropolis he has left an enduring mark on the local history of his time. Bringing to his duties the skill of an expert he has for many years guided the Board through the shoals and quicksands of a perilous period, and, though he has often been hampered and thwarted by colleagues whose views were diametrically opposed to his own, he has contrived to maintain the financial equilibrium with more than a moderate amount of success. It is not an insignificant task that Sir Richard Temple has had to perform. The London School Board is no ordinary parochial body. Its income is reckoned in millions of pounds, and its jurisdiction extends to a population larger than that of Ireland. The very extent of the interests entrusted to its care exposes the administration of the Board to evils of which smaller bodies have no experience. Recent events have shown that corruption has eaten its way into the vitals of one department of the organisation, and produced a long list of badly constructed and ill-drained schools. For these scandals the ratepayers have, in the main, to thank the system under which the Board worked, which rendered venality easy; but some part of the result is also attributable to the very vastness of the Board's operations, and the absence of those natural checks on dishonesty which exist in smaller places. Something has now been done to prevent future irregularities, but Sir Richard Temple is not sanguine of their complete success. He takes a pessimistic view of all London local government, and fears that no scheme that can be devised will, in face of the conditions of life which obtain in the great city, be absolutely effectual. However, he may be trusted to do his part in rendering the way of the transgressor difficult, and, so long as he occupies his present position on the Board, there will probably be no repetition of the scandals lately brought to light.

Something might, and perhaps ought, to be said in describing Sir Richard Temple's life in England of his literary labours. Side by side with his public duties he has maintained an active connection with the world of letters, and hardly a month has passed without bringing from his pen some productions, the result of his ripe experience and sound judgment. But this side of the eminent administrator's life is as well known in India as in England, and it would be a work of supererogation to enter into details on the point. Let it suffice to say that, in the opinion of many eminent critics, Sir Richard has made for himself a name as a writer on Indian questions not much inferior to that of Kaye.

THE U. C. S.

(Civil and Military Gazette).

There are many other grievances to be examined into by the Uncovenanted Service Committee besides that of diminished pensions, but the pension grievance is the most important, and the one upon which most rhetoric is employed. Now, it does not seem to have occurred to any one, though it will doubtless be suggested to the Committee, to propose what seems a very equitable and not very expensive way out of the pension grievance difficulty. As everyone knows, the men who entered the service before 1872 or thereabouts could not foresee that the rupee was going to fall, and entered the service no doubt partly because they looked forward to a £500 per annum pension when their work was done; while those who came in after 1872, and especially after 1882, when the fall had set steadily in, entered it with their eyes open and knew they could not expect a sterling payment. Under these circumstances, would it not be fair to say that every man should receive his pension at the rate at which the rupee stood when he entered the service? The principle, we admit, would be arbitrary, but not unfair, for while there is no special reason for selecting the rate current on the opening day of the service rather than on the closing one (which is now chosen), it would differentiate all the cases, and proportion the hardship more evenly among the junior and senior men. To make the proposal clearer, let us take a concrete instance. A joined the service in 1870 when no one dreamt of the rupee losing one-fourth of its value. He expected his pension would be paid in rupees of par value, and his expectations ought not to be balked. B entered the service in 1880 when the rupee had come down to one-and-ninety or one-and-eightpence, and though he was aware his pension would be paid at the rate prevailing when he retired, he thought it almost wildly improbable that the fall was otherwise than temporary, and that the rupee would really sink so low as it has done. He had, therefore, strong ground for hoping to get a fair sterling pension. C entered the service five years ago—in 1885—when the rupee was one-and-sixpence or thereabouts. Now for C there is nothing to be said. He knew that the rupee was falling and might continue to fall, and he had his ears full of the ins and outs of the whole subject, cost of living, price of silver, chance of rehabilitation, and all the rest of it; and while C has no right whatever to look for payment at any rate over one and sixpence, if he gets his pension at the full rate he will be lucky beyond his most sanguine expectations. Suppose, however, that A, B, and C were to be paid their pensions at the rate at which the rupee stood when they entered the service respectively, none of them would have reason to grumble, and all of them would have a better pension than they now can look to. The cost to Government would not be nearly so great as it would be if the artificial rule were laid down that a rupee was to be equivalent to two shillings; and the principle would always be a guide to every man who comes hereafter into the service, for he has only to remember what the rate was when he entered to at once calculate his pension.

BENGAL.

DARJEELING is, says the Englishman, going through rather a bad bout of influenza. Four deaths have occurred in the Bhutia Basti, and two in the bazaar. Rain is also needed very badly in the Darjeeling district. A continuance of the present dry weather will seriously affect the tea-gardens, both in the Terai and in the hills.

THE final record of the Maharajah of Kuch-Bihar's last shooting party totals up as follows, the expedition having lasted from Feb. 14 to March 19, a total of 29 days' actual shooting. The bag consisted of 21 tigers, 6 rhinoceros, 15 buffaloes, 1 bison, 7 bears, 18 large deer, 14 pigs, and 91 game birds of different sorts.

THE time-honoured Derby has at last, says the Asian, disappeared from the programme of the Calcutta race meeting for next season. Although it was hoped that, with the handsome sum of Rs. 5,000 added last year, some of the many owners of Arabs in the Bombayside might be induced to send houses to Calcutta, this turned out not to be the case; and the money thus wasted can be better employed elsewhere.

A FIRE occurred, on the night of the 20th instant, in a large hut at Narcondanga, near the Calcutta Gasworks, by which four Mahomedan children, all girls, were severely burned. Two of them, aged eleven and twelve years, died while on their way to the hospital; the other two are under treatment. The fire is said to have been caused by the two younger children upsetting an open lamp close to where the two who were fatally burned were engaged in filling bottles with kerosine oil from a tin canister.

SERIOUS defalcations have been discovered in the local branch of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China. Wildest rumours are afloat regarding the fraud in consequence of the refusal of the management to furnish details. It is believed that something approaching six lakhs of rupees have been misappropriated, and the telegram from England stating that fifty thousand pounds have been placed to contingent fund to meet the loss instead of passing that sum to reserve fund, confirms the story.

MR. CROFTON, of the Crofton Theatrical Company, obtained a summons in the High Court to-day against the editor of Hayes Sporting News for Rs. 15,000, for defamation.

MADRAS.

FROM the 5th to the 11th instant, 1 European, 7 East Indians, 11 Native Christians, 260 Hindus, and 51 Mahomedans died in Madras, making a total of 330 persons. The average of the corresponding week for the ten previous years was 292. The deaths are thus classified, viz., 3 from small-pox, 19 from measles, 122 from fever, 33 from dysentery, 9 from diarrhoea, and 154 from other diseases. The death-rate in the week under notice was 43.0 per 1,000 per annum. The mean of the ten previous years was 38.1 per 1,000 per annum.

A MADRAS contemporary says:—H.H. the Maharajah of Travancore, G.C.S.I., has been much moved by the premature death of the late Colonel Brodie Ketchen, the Commandant of the Nair Brigade. "I have lost the best and truest friend I ever had," he remarked in a letter of condolence to Mrs. Ketchen. As a practical token of the high esteem in which he held her husband, he has conferred on that lady, "as the widow of an officer I valued so highly, and a private friend whom I so deeply regret," a pension of £60 a year. Mrs. Ketchen is a passenger to England in the Goorkha, which left Ceylon on the 10th inst.

THE Madras Mail regrets to have to announce the death, on the West Coast, at a comparatively early age, of Surgeon James Kernan, J.M.S., Acting Civil Surgeon of Cannanore, son of the Hon. Mr. Justice Kernan, who recently retired after a long service as a Judge of the Madras High Court. The intelligence was received by wire by Mr. John Kernan, the brother of the deceased, barrister-at-law and Clerk of the Crown, Madras High Court. Dr. Kernan was married but ten months ago to a daughter of Colonel Stephens, of the 4th Light Cavalry, at Secunderabad. His death was unexpected and sudden.

A CORRESPONDENT has sent the Madras Mail the following extract from a letter he has received from a passenger on board the s.s. Manora, which left Madras on the 25th ult. for London:—"On Saturday night, 29th March last, an awful tragedy happened. Amongst the passengers from Calcutta were a gentleman, his wife, and two children. She struck us as being rather strange in manner; but she was under no restraint. She just came and went like everyone else on board. On Saturday evening, after dinner, she came up on deck and stood staring hard out at sea with a queer expression on her face. The thought just flashed across me, 'I wonder if she wants to throw herself overboard.' She remarked, however, that she was looking for her husband. She slept upon deck between her husband and her little son of three and a-half years old. Very soon after midnight the quartermaster on his rounds missed her from her place, and woke the husband. Search was made all over the ship, but she was never found. She had evidently watched her opportunity, and thrown herself overboard. The poor husband is perfectly distracted. She was quite a young lady, tall, graceful, and very handsome."

THE Telephonic Exchange has, says the Madras Mail, for some time engaged the attention of the mercantile community in Madras, and experiments in this direction are soon to take a practical shape. The Oriental Telephone Company is expecting shortly from England a light submarine cable with which it is proposed to try the experiment of connecting vessels in the harbour with the Company's Central Exchange, thus bringing the ships into direct communication with the mercantile offices, banks, and the principal shops in the city. This will not only be a great convenience to passengers on board the steamers, but of much importance to steamer agents and shippers. It may be mentioned, that only recently the office on the pier was brought into telephonic communication with the shore.

BOMBAY.

(April 25.)

MR. J. SLADEN, C.S., is gazetted to act temporarily as Fourth Assistant Political Agent, Kattywar.

MR. W. WOODWARD has been permitted to resign the Bombay Civil Service, with effect from March 1st last.

CAPTAIN C. F. GRANTHAM, 6th Bombay Cavalry, is appointed to be Cantonment Magistrate at Jacobabad.

AT about 2.30 A.M. on the 16th inst. a most daring attempt was made on the life of Mr. Shamrao Narayan Laud, the Dewan of Cambay, whose name will be remembered in connection with the case in which Mr. Wilson was concerned. It seems that about the hour in question, while the Dewan was lying asleep in his bedroom in the Dewan's Kothi, some person approached the bed and stabbed him on the left shoulder. Fortunately Mr. Laud was wearing thick clothing at the time, and the sharp weapon only inflicted a slight wound, but still the pain which its sharp infliction occasioned was sufficient to awake the Dewan, who on getting up to raise an alarm received another cut on the nose from the instrument with which his assailant was armed. The latter then rushed out of the room and managed to effect his escape. With the least possible delay information of the occurrence was conveyed to the police, who immediately set about making inquiries as to the whereabouts of the Dewan's would-be assassin, but nothing was ascertained till Friday, when the Dewan, who arrived here on Friday morning, received the following telegram from Cambay:—"Culprits discovered. Very bad disclosures. Accused admitted everything in main. Particulars posted." So far little is known about the motive which actuated the culprit or culprits to make the attempt on the Dewan's life, but the assault is believed to be the result of a political intrigue. The manner in which the culprit or culprits entered the house is somewhat of a mystery, as the place is, as a rule, guarded by something like eight armed sepoys. On the night in question two or three members of the guard failed to put in an appearance at the proper hour, while one of the other five who were on duty, when questioned, stated that he saw a man leave the Dewan's bedroom and drop from the terrace outside the room, but he made off before his arrest could be effected. One of the Dewan's body-servants, who had been told off for the night to punka his master, was also absent when the assault was committed. Mr. Laud, who, as already stated, arrived in Bombay on Friday morning, is now under the treatment of Dr. Gopal Shivram. Fortunately his injuries are of a very slight nature. The police have since arrested two Mahomedans, who have made confessions that at the instigation of a Bunniah, who has made himself scarce, they attempted to murder the Dewan. It is said that the household servants of the Dewan are also implicated in the matter.

AT a meeting of the friends of the late Mr. George Manson, held at the Port Trust Offices on Monday afternoon, it was resolved that subscriptions be collected for the erection of a memorial tablet in St. Andrew's Church, Bombay, a monument or tombstone over the grave in Malta, and the founding of scholarships at the Scottish Orphanage, the interest being given to the widow of the deceased, or in the event of sufficient funds not being available for the latter object, that the whole of the balance in hand be handed over to Mrs. Manson.

MR. JUSTICE BIRDWOOD presided on the 17th inst. at the annual general meeting of the Bombay Book and Tract Society and the Bombay Auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society held at the Young Men's Christian Association Rooms, Apollo Bunder. The reports of both the Societies having been adopted, the retiring committees were re-elected, the chairman, before closing the meeting, referring to the deep loss the Societies had sustained by the death of the late Mr. Manson.

Anglo-India says:—Self-satisfaction, qualified by true piety, is the keynote of Lord Reay's farewell address to the people of Bombay. His boast that his object had been to carry out strictly the Queen's proclamation was, no doubt, sincere enough, and might find a sufficient answer in the famous words of Madame Roland. His statement that "when a grave departure from those principles was ordered from England" he at once tendered his resignation, implying, as it does, a serious charge against Her Majesty's Ministers, challenges criticism of a different kind. It might, at least, have been reserved for another place and a more becoming occasion.

ITARI bids fair soon to grow into a large and thriving junction station, where the Indian Midland and G.I.P. will meet. Extensive station buildings, siding accommodation, and other arrangements are being actively undertaken by the G.I.P. authorities, at a cost of several lakhs, to be recouped to them from Indian Midland funds later on. The G.I.P. Company is responsible for the working of the joint station, and will doubtless give the public and the I.M. directors ample satisfaction. Great endeavours are being made by the Traffic Department to nurse existing, and develop new, traffic.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—Rain during week in parts of Shikarpore, Upper Sind Frontier, Khandeish, Nassik, Kolaba, Poona, Ahmednugger, Sholapore, Bijapore, Belgaum, Dharwar, and Kanara. Exotic cotton in two talukas of Dharwar blighted. Jowari in Ahmednugger middling. Crops otherwise good. Harvesting of late crops continues in several districts, and cotton picking in Gujarat, Southern Mahratta Country, and Baroda. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in most districts. Fodder scarce in two talukas of Khandeish and Dharwar, and one of Nassik and Poona. Water scarce in three talukas of Nassik, and one of Dharwar.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAUB.

(April 23.)

COLONEL THÜLLIER, Surveyor-General, is expected to arrive in Simla on the 25th.

THE Rana of Koti, in whose territory the well-known Sipi fair near Simla is usually held, is reported to be seriously unwell.

A CIRCULAR, the Lahore paper understands, has been issued to the Punjab Police establishment, exhorting them not to marry before the age of thirty-five.

SOME idea of the mildness of the late winter in the hills may perhaps be gathered from the fact that ice or rather compressed snow is now being advertised in Simla at over seven rupees a maund.

A CONTEMPORARY remarks that Simla habitués returning to their old haunts find the United Service Club altered out of all resemblance to its former self. What with two new blocks of chambers, the new public rooms, the new covered tennis court and stables, the Club premises have the appearance of a little township in themselves. At present the place is in the hands of the carpenters and workmen, but in another week or ten days some of the new chambers—and very desirable apartments they are—will be ready for occupation. The tennis-court (alas that it was not a racquet court) is already open; and the public rooms are to be open by the 1st May, though probably the last touches will be some time longer in filling in. A month or two hence, and members will be wondering how they could have endured the old stuffy premises so long.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MAY 5.

—O—

FACTORY LAW IN INDIA.

MR. HOWARTH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether children were allowed to work in Indian cotton factories at seven years of age, and to be kept at work for nine hours per day; also whether it was the case that there were no restrictions whatever affecting the employment of young persons over 12 years of age, or of women in regard to the number of hours during which they might work; and whether, in view of the fact that the Berlin Labour Conference recommended that children should not be admitted to work in any industry under twelve years of age, and then only for six hours per day till they were fourteen, that young persons from fourteen to sixteen years of age should not work more than ten hours per day, and that women should in no case work more than eleven hours per day, Her Majesty's Government proposed to take any steps to bring the factory law in India into conformity with the Berlin standard.

SIR J. GORST: The existing factory law of India is correctly stated in the question. A Bill has been introduced, which is not yet passed, raising the age at which children can be employed to nine, and restricting the hours of labour of women to eleven. The Secretary of State will send the resolutions of the Berlin Conference to the Government of India, and will commend them to the careful consideration of that Government in connection with the proposed amendment of the factory law.

MR. MUNDELLA asked whether the proposal would come before the House before being approved by the Secretary for India?

SIR J. GORST: I do not think it will.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. BEVAN'S EXPLORATIONS IN NEW GUINEA.*

"Papua for the Papuans and the Missionaries." Such is the war-cry of Messrs. Lawes and Chalmers, the two representatives of the London Missionary Society, for the most part resident at Port Moresby, and so quite out of harm's way. According to these two fanatical gentlemen the dreadful massacres that have so frequently occurred along the coasts of New Guinea were merely acts of retaliation on the part of the Natives, roused to vengeance by the brutal treatment they have had to endure at the hands of European and Australian adventurers. No doubt some provocation has been given, especially by kidnapping youthful adults to labour on the Queensland plantations; but as a rule the traders have been surprised while fishing for the bêche mer, or during the nighttime, and murdered with scarce a show of resistance. The impunity with which these barbarous outrages have been perpetrated is greatly answerable for the audacity displayed by the savages. Occasionally, after a long delay, a British war-vessel anchors off the offending village, and demands the surrender of the actual murderers. The usual answer is the rapid flight of the villagers into the woods, whence they closely watch the proceedings of the enemy. Now and again a village may be fired and some fruit trees cut down, but it oftener happens in these civilised times that a deputation, bringing fruit and vegetables, is kindly received, and that after some idle palaver the officers purchase a few curios, and both parties separate with every demonstration of mutual goodwill. This may be a charitable and Christianlike mode of dealing with grave crimes, but it fails to inspire awe, and is decidedly not a deterrent. The Missionaries, who are believed to recommend and approve such imbecility, take very good care not to expose themselves to any danger. They send into the interior half-trained teachers from the Pacific Islands, who readily fraternise with the Papuan savages, but do not appear to make any converts worthy of the name. Unhappily for Mr. Bevan these two Missionaries had contrived to poison the minds of the successive Special Commissioners, Major-General Sir Peter Scratchley and the Hon. John Douglas, and dissuaded them from granting the smallest portion of territory to the man who, more than any other, had opened the highways of commerce from the malarious coast of the Papuan Gulf into the mountain ranges of the interior. Mr. Bevan's discoveries were further honourably distinguished by the absence of all violence towards the savage population. Though an extremely young man, and in spite of frequent provocation, he carefully avoided coming into collision with the Natives, on one occasion only was he compelled in self-defence to blow the steam-whistle and to fire a gun two or three times into the air, whereupon his assailants fled into the woods. His discoveries were numerous and important, though conducted in a tiny steam-launch quite unfitted to encounter the stormy seas that have to be traversed off the British New Guinea coasts. The Mabel, lent to him by Sir Henry Parkes, was dependent for fuel on the wood he was able to procure day by day, often with great difficulty and danger. She was filled, besides, to the combings with commodities for barter, and with tinned meats and other provisions for four Europeans and four coloured boys. The rivers discovered and ascended by Mr. Bevan for nearly a hundred miles were Queen's Jubilee River, the Douglas, and its affluent the Philp. The first-named river is described as being as wide as the Thames at London Bridge, with the peculiarity of rolling a volume of sweet, drinkable water to within fifteen miles of the sea. All these streams, however, are navigable by only small vessels, banks of mud and pebbles forming in the channel, except during the season of heavy rains. The banks are composed of swampy, alluvial soil favourable for the cultivation of rice, sugar, and tobacco, but uninhabitable by Europeans. The sea coast, though unsuitable for Europeans, is peopled by native fishermen, strong, powerful, and healthy, and possessing a far more robust physique than the tribes in the interior, who are less well nourished. The highlands might quite well be colonised. They are covered with magnificent timber of great variety, and valuable for commercial purposes. Mr. Bevan, it may be remarked, is a naturalist as well as an adventurous explorer, and alighted upon several plants of great beauty and fragrance previously unknown to science. His description of the manners, customs, and usages of the natives of British New Guinea is extremely interesting, and goes over much new ground. His early adventures, too, under Ah Gim, the Chinese captain of the Wong King, were very exciting; nor were his experiences under the famous Nicholas Minister less worthy of note. Both of these daring adventurers were shortly afterwards massacred, though no cause of offence had been given by them. In short, Mr. Bevan's book will command the interest of his readers from beginning to end, while he himself deserves a better fate than has hitherto befallen him at the hands of missionary-ridden Special Commissioners. As British New Guinea is now a Crown Colony, better things may, perhaps, be expected of the new administrator, Dr. Wm. Macgregor.

THE HERIOTS.*

A novel from the pen of Sir H. Cunningham is sure to be welcomed by a crowd of Anglo-Indian readers who still remember the delightful "Chronicles of Dustypore." It is to be hoped that the clever author has not altogether forgotten old days in the East, and that he will yet give us another charming story of Anglo-Indian life in hills and plains. In "The Heriots" he is as clever, as witty, and as cynical as ever; but we confess to having a preference for the worldly-wise, and sometimes worldly-wicked people who met at burra Khanas, at Dustypore, to those we meet at fashionable dinner-parties in the society of the Heriots. But it is still pleasant to meet with a writer who can make his characters, male and female, talk so brilliantly and entertainingly as Sir H. Cunningham does his. Dinner-parties would not be the terrible inflictions which so many of them are if guests and hosts and hostesses indulged in the lively kind of conversation which those described in "The Heriots" do. In this direction Sir Henry has a gift denied to many novelists, and he can therefore afford to be less particular about the plot of his stories. Indeed, in his present novel, the reader will find much more to interest him or her in the people than in the plot, and this is why we hope to get another Anglo-Indian novel from the same clever writer.

JAMES VRAILLE†

We are not surprised to hear that a cheap and popular edition of this novel is likely to be issued, for, notwithstanding the melancholy tone which pervades the story, the book is one which has found many sympathetic readers. We cannot endorse the opinion of the critic in the Times, who described it as "a very faithful picture of military society in India." We hope that it is not so, for we should be sorry to believe that society is altogether so black as it is painted in some pages here. We are certain that few officers have had the sad experiences of Captain James Vraille, although many have, perhaps, married vain and foolish women, but not altogether of the type of Mrs. Vraille. But the book is a clever one—original, forcible in style, and showing that the author has much graphic power in drawing characters and placing them in dramatic situations. The story might, perhaps, have been made less gloomy without any loss of interest, but it is a story well told, and an effective one.

THE GOODWIN SANDS.‡

This is a book which will have a fascination for many readers, for the name of the "Goodwin Sands" has been one fraught with terror to many generations of Englishmen from their earliest reading of tales of shipwreck and disasters at sea. But the treacherous "Goodwins" do not represent any hidden danger; they are close to the pleasant little town of Deal, in front of which they lie, well marked out, buoyed, and beacons, and at low tide plainly visible. Yet what records of death and sudden doom are connected with them! Mr. Gattie gives the history of these sands from the first knowledge of them until to-day. The work is well done, showing considerable research, and is most interesting, and the letter-press is accompanied by maps, charts, and illustrations.

THE PASSION PLAY OF OBER-AMMERGAU.§

We can honestly recommend this translation to all intending visitors to Ober-Ammergau, as they will find it of the greatest use in helping them to understand and appreciate the meaning of the celebrated Passion Play—which has taken such hold of the minds of the simple folk for whose benefit it was first put upon the stage. In this handy volume the whole drama has been translated into English, and the songs of the chorus into German and English—a literal version being given. So complete a translation has never been printed before—so the aid given to the English reader is great and valuable. In addition to this the author gives useful hints regarding routes, lodgings, &c., with a map of the neighbourhood, and a plan of the theatre in which the drama is enacted.

THE INDIA OFFICE LIST FOR 1890.*

This is much more than a plain book of reference in the matter of names and services, such as one might be led to suppose from its simple title. Giving the names and services of all officials under the India Office, compiled from authentic sources, the volume contains a vast amount of information concerning the official administration of India up to the latest date. The information given is concise, but comprehensive enough too; is carefully collated, and put together in an intelligent way. It is a most complete and valuable annual of reference on all matters pertaining to the India Office.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for the current month is a capital number. Amongst a series of excellent articles, we would specially commend Major Preston's most sensible advocacy of the introduction of military training into all schools as a part of every boy's education. Such training would not only be physically beneficial, but would tend to make the army much more popular amongst the masses, and so secure better classes of recruits than at present. Rear-Admiral Colomb continues his able Papers on "Naval Warfare," and Judge O'Connor Morris contributes a study of Napoleon as possessing in the highest degree the genius of a great commander. Is it not, however, a little late in the day for a military magazine to make this discovery? Readers of the magazine will this month miss the Editor's clever pen in certain contributions which helped so much to bring this periodical to its present standard; but good men have given good work, and the illustrations continue to improve.

In that pleasant book of Reminiscences, "Leaves of a Life," by Montagu Williams, Q.C., a book which the publishers, Messrs. Macmillan, must have found to be as eagerly in demand in India as here, occurs the following, which will not be without interest to many Anglo-Indians:—

"My very dear friend, Douglas Straight, was called to the Bar on November 11th, 1865. We were, indeed, the most intimate and the staunchest of friends, and so we remain to this day. He is now Mr. Justice Straight, of Allahabad, one of the North-West Provinces of India. In 1891, I believe, he will become entitled to his pension, and will return to his native land and to his legion of friends. Douglas Straight has been the architect of his own fortunes.

"My earliest recollection of him dates from the time when, on leaving Harrow, he came to London, and, with a view to making a little money, turned his attention to journalism. An evening newspaper, called the Glow-worm, had just been started, and Douglas became one of its principal contributors. The precise circumstances under which I first encountered my future friend were somewhat peculiar. As I was crossing Waterloo Bridge one day, I saw a young man go up to two newsboys and soundly cuff their ears, their offence being that they had failed to call out the Glow-worm in sufficiently stentorian tones. It was Douglas Straight."

THE subjoined is from the Indian Daily News:—The Indian Mirror quotes as from "a Bombay paper" a paragraph which we published a few days since concerning Lady Reay's gift of Rs. 10,000 towards the Convalescent Home for Europeans to be built at Khandalla, and remarks on it: "This is real charity. Did Lady Dufferin part with a single farthing for such purpose when she was in India?" To which we may add that, however much the Mirror may admire "real charity" in others, he appears to be curiously deficient in the virtue himself. There is no need for us to inquire whether Lady Dufferin did or did not contribute to the relief of suffering while in India by donations from her private purse. All India knows—and all India is grateful for the fact, with the exception, apparently, of the Mirror—that Lady Dufferin conferred greater benefits on suffering humanity in this country than perhaps any other individual has ever been the means of securing. And, as it happens, Lady Dufferin did contribute directly to the hospital funds in exactly the same manner that Lady Reay has done. Fancy Fairs were organised by Lady Dufferin at Simla, the proceeds of which were given by her Ladyship to the Simla Hospital. The Rs. 10,000 given by Lady Reay to the Khandalla Convalescent Home was part of the Rs. 36,000 realised by the recent Fancy Fair on a large scale at Bombay. If it had been a gift from Lady Reay's private purse, the Mirror's sneer at Lady Dufferin would not have been a bit less vulgar and uncalled for. But as we were responsible—and not "a Bombay paper"—for omitting to explain the precise nature of the gift in the first instance, it is perhaps as well that we should do so now.

THE MAMLATDARS IN THE CRAWFORD CASE AGAIN.

Is there never to be an ending to the discussions arising from the action taken by Lord Reay and that taken by the Secretary of State in the matter of the Mamlatdars incriminated in the Crawford case? The majority of Anglo-Indians, who for weeks and weeks found the columns of Indian papers by successive Overland Mails filled with dreary and dry reports of the Crawford trial and all its surroundings, must long ago have summarised the whole proceedings as John Lang summarised in his celebrated leading article those of the Gorham case, "D——n the Gorham case"; but this, it appears, is not to be allowed. Mr. Bradlaugh will not allow the dead past to bury its dead; he would ask questions—prompted by interested parties—about this Mamlatdar business, of which we have a shrewd suspicion he understands little or nothing—not even, perhaps, the meaning of the word—but, having asked his question, the Press has now been treated to two papers, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed; concerning the Crawford case. One of these, some ninety odd pages of Blue-book size, gives copies of, or extracts from, the Correspondence with the Governments of India and Bombay as to the Mamlatdars incriminated up to December last, and the other is a continuation of the same delightful topic in the shape of a letter from the Government of India to the Secretary of State, giving cover to two memorials protesting against the action of that official in not upholding the guarantee of indemnity of the Bombay Government. One of these memorials is from Mr. W. H. Probert, and the other from Mr. Keyser, both officers of high standing in the Bombay Civil Service. The Government of India has received memorials addressed to the Secretary of State by three other Bombay civilians, who were, however, informed that they had no business to address such memorials to Her Majesty's Secretary of State on a matter with which they had no personal concern. So their memorials were not forwarded. But with regard to the two other memorials, the Viceroy in Council writes:—"We forward Mr. Probert's on account of the high position which he occupies, and Mr. Keyser's both on account of his connection with the Crawford inquiry, and because it contains the most forcible statement we have seen of the typical arguments which have been advanced against the action taken in the matter of the guarantee to the Mamlatdars who incriminated themselves." This would show that the Government of India is very much impressed by the arguments brought forward by these gentlemen—arguments which they leave to the Secretary of State to answer, but which he does not. Mr. Probert's paper is, however, more of a protest than an argument, but Mr. Keyser's is a very elaborate and exhaustive piece of reasoning against the action taken by the Secretary of State in refusing to uphold the indemnity promised by Lord Reay. Mr. Keyser has served twenty-four years in the Bombay Civil Service, and, when acting under Mr. Crawford, had not only long ago suspected that officer of corrupt practices, but had brought the same to the notice of Government without effect. His remarks concerning Mr. Crawford are scathing enough, but with these we need not concern ourselves now. We give Mr. Keyser's view as to the position in which he says the action of the Secretary of State leaves District Officers—English gentlemen of the Civil Service who have to work through Native channels:—

"Your lordship," he says, "will excuse an allusion to the many complimentary things which are habitually said by departing Viceroys and others of the members of the service to which your memorialist belongs. So much is at any rate true that Government can only administer the country through us, and that we must be their channels of communication with the people, as also the instruments to carry out their policy. In our turn (your memorialist adopts the first person for convenience) we have to administer with such material as is available. It is merely shutting our eyes to known facts to pretend that the subordinate Native service is generally above temptation, or that many, if not, as is sometimes asserted, most of its members are corrupt. Your memorialist personally believes that corruption is on the decline, and that the service is less corrupt than it was; but a high moral standard in this respect, although it may be wished for, is not yet attainable, and is scarcely in accordance with the customs or habits of thought of the country. Of all forms of corruption presents to a highly-placed officer would be in Native eyes the most venial, and it is yet the custom in many Native States for the chief to take such presents as 'Najarana' in making appointments.

"Your memorialist is thus fully assured that the promise given may be kept without danger to the best interests of the public, or of the service itself; and, as far as he can ascertain, the whole body of administrators in the Bombay Civil Service, that is, of the men who are in the best position to form an opinion, and who are in a measure responsible for any mischief which might ensue from their opinion being acted on, are practically unanimous on the point.

"On the other hand, any loss of confidence in the good faith of Government must, your memorialist humbly submits, be attended with incalculable danger; for on it must mainly depend the moral hold an alien Government has on the goodwill and the respect of its subjects.

"The position of district officers, which is yearly becoming more difficult with the growing restlessness consequent on the development of the intelligence of the people and the fading memories of the hardships they suffered under Native rule, will become almost unbearably so if it is once thought that the pledged word of the Government, between whom and the people they act as intermediaries, can no longer be relied on. And should any time of special danger be in store for us no promise of immunity can be expected to induce any suspected persons to come forward with information; and all experience teaches that in times of political danger and trouble the evidence of such witnesses is indispensable."

As a proof that he is in earnest in fearing that danger has been done to the prestige of British rule by the action taken by the Secretary of State, Mr. Kayser tenders his resignation of his appointment, and asks leave to retire from the service in which he has for so many years held a high and honourable position.

This may show that he has the courage of his opinions, but it shows also that "some one has blundered"—only the blunder has now to be shared. Lord Cross is to be pitied, but what of Lord Reay?

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE 33rd Madras Infantry paraded, for the last time, on April 21st on the Fort Glacis, where they had been encamped since their arrival from Moulmein and Port Blair on the 14th. The men fell in in plain clothes, but with arms and accoutrements, the strength being 691 rank and file, 16 native officers, 41 non-commissioned officers, and seven European officers. The disbandment order having been already read to the regiment at Moulmein, the Commandant, Colonel Richmond, made a short speech in Hindustani, which was translated into Tamil, expressing his regret at the disbandment, and wished long life and prosperity to those about to be pensioned. He hoped that the men transferred to other regiments would maintain the good name and soldierlike bearing they had always held in the 33rd Regiment. They then marched into the Fort to deposit their arms and accoutrements.

THE officers have strongly protested against the transfer of band instruments, mess furniture, &c., to the new corps to be formed of Punjabis. The disbandment of this fine regiment is generally considered a great pity. Last year the Commander-in-Chief, at his inspection in Burma, characterised it as the best in discipline, physique, and shooting in the Madras army. For the last three years the regiment has been at the top of the list in shooting. Most of the European officers have volunteered for service with the new local battalions in Burma.

THAT most useful class of non-commissioned officers, paymaster-sergeants, are doomed, the fat having gone forth from the Horse Guards that no more appointments to the grade are to be made. At home the changes introduced lately for the payment of troops may render such an order necessary, but in India the case is very different, these non-commissioned officers being the very backbone of regimental pay offices.

FROM Murree comes the story of another case of murder of a Native by a soldier. A private of the Northumberland Fusiliers, while accompanying the baggage, &c., of his regiment is reported by the Lahore paper to have shot the bullock-van driver dead, and wounded another man, on Sunday morning. It appears that the soldier was suffering from fever, and was hurrying the cart-man on; but the latter, about a couple of miles below Tret, unyoked his bullocks and ran away. This seemed to enrage the soldier beyond control, and is the only cause up to the present that is assigned for the unfortunate occurrence.

THE Civil and Military Gazette writes:—We regret to record yet another instance in which a Native has lost his life through the rash and cruel conduct of some English soldiers. On the night of the 7th instant, we learn, between eleven and twelve o'clock, a Native was noticed by a sentry of the Seaforth Highlanders prowling near the lines. He was challenged twice by the sentry, who fired on getting no reply. The man was not hit, and managed to get away, but was subsequently secured by a private of the same regiment. When the shot was fired, it naturally brought to the scene several persons, among whom were three Native caretakers in the employment of the Military Works authorities. They appear to have been taken by the soldiers for bad characters, and were as such at once attacked. To escape the soldiers they ran back to the hut where they had been sleeping, but were followed by the soldiers, who violently assaulted them, and finally brought them as prisoners to the guard-house. All three were badly wounded with sticks and bayonets, and one of them died about 2 A.M., from the effects of the injuries he received. The other two were sent to hospital, where they are now under treatment. The civil surgeon, we are informed, has certified that the deceased died from rupture of the spleen, but his death was undoubtedly accelerated by the existence of two deep punctured wounds in his left side and on his head. The case will be tried by a military court of inquiry.

THE Indian Planter's Gazette writes:—“That during the last few years the Behar Light Horse has been slowly but surely deteriorating no one in the district will deny, and no better illustration of this could be quoted than the last inspection at Mozufferpore in February. Among the crowd standing down were dozens of men either actually able-bodied, members of the corps or efficient in every way to join. We do not pretend to know the reason for this unsatisfactory state of things, but simply state the fact that most undoubtedly the once strong esprit de corps has been allowed to die out in the regiment, and both officers and men seem, with very few exceptions, to have lost heart and interest in the Behar Light Horse. Moreover, very feeble support is being accorded by the members to parades and the general business, without attention to which efficiency cannot be attained. That something is radically wrong cannot be denied, and as in common with all India we should be sorry to see what was once the finest volunteer cavalry in the country die out from sheer inanition, we hold it our duty to appeal to the officers to shake themselves together; to ask them to meet and consult over affairs, and on finding out where the shoe pinches to endeavour to rectify matters ere it be too late.”

CONSIDERABLE inconvenience having been experienced in Bombay on the departure of the last troopship for England by officers from Bengal who had hurried down to the port of embarkation at short notice in obtaining final last pay certificates for Europe, it may be as well to quote the procedure. An officer moved from his station to another, if not on regimental payment, has to obtain a last pay certificate from the Treasury Officer by whom last paid, which has to be sent to the Pay Examiner of the circle, who thereupon issues a last pay certificate, which he forwards to the officer concerned (in nine cases out of ten too late to be of use) for presentation at the port of embarkation to the paymaster there, who finally settles with him and issues a final last pay certificate by which he can only obtain payment in continuation in Europe. There is no reason whatever why the Treasury Officer's last pay certificate should not be acted upon without the intervention of the Pay Examiner and officers saved much inconvenience and annoyance. In the case of an officer embarking at Rangoon direct for Europe he will obtain a final last pay certificate from the circle paymaster there: but should an officer embark at Karachi, then he has the usual amount of red-tape to get through, and has to apply for a last pay certificate to the Pay Examiner of the circle to which he belongs, which in any case means ten days' delay.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the continuance of the system of granting a money allowance to Native troops serving in Baluchistan in lieu of rations in kind. This has been found to be more satisfactory to all concerned than the usual grant of grain compensation for dearness of food. Could not this money payment system be applied to all India?

TWO Colonels' wives in Pindi, says the Lahore paper, have been ably following Lady Roberts' good example in showing much interest in the hospitals this season, the one having handed over a sum of money (the proceeds of some late concerts) to Brigade-Surgeon Churchill for extra improvements and comforts in the hospitals, and the other having a surplus sum in hand from a charitable fund partially re-furnishing the hospital for soldiers' wives and children. We should be glad to have similar news from every military station in India.

THE official statement of the quantity of country salt sold throughout India during the year ending March 31st does not, the Pioneer remarks, seem to bear out the wild assertions frequently made regarding restrictions of consumption caused by the recent increase of the duty. On the contrary, we find that the sales amounted to close on four lakhs of maunds more than in the year preceding, the net increase in the duty collected being over nine and a quarter lakhs. The test of consumption, therefore, itself a favourite one with the critics of Government policy in this matter, is far from proving that the increase in the duty has been felt the bitter hardship we are often asked to believe.

THE Pioneer asks, is the Governor of Bombay a representative of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress accredited to the Courts of the most puissant rulers of the three hundred States in Kattywar, or is he the Governor of that portion of the Western Presidency? If the latter, how comes it that Lord Reay permitted himself to be addressed as follows by the Chiefs and Princes of Kattywar:—“Your relations in the capacity of the representative of her Imperial Majesty the Queen-Empress with us and our States have been characterised by a statesmanlike grasp of every question that formed the subject of consideration between us.” When the managers of the Poona Native Institution “humbly and respectfully craved permission to offer heartfelt thanks for the long-wished-for opportunity of submitting a valedictory address,” no one probably requested that this sentence should be re-drafted. But when petty potentates in a portion of the territories administered by a Presidency Government address the head of the Local Government in terms implying that he merely occupies the post of ambassador to their microscopic Courts, it should be somebody's duty to correct the draft before the address itself is enclosed in a silver casket and presented in the durbar-room of Government House.

A SANITARIUM FOR BURMA.

(FROM TIMES BURMA CORRESPONDENT.)

The want of a sanitarium has been greatly felt in Burma. At present the two nearest hill-stations to Burma are Darjeeling, in the Himalayas, and Coonoor in the Neilgherries. A visit to Darjeeling involves a sea journey for four and a-half days from Rangoon to Calcutta, a delay of a day in Calcutta, and then twenty-six hours by rail from Calcutta to Darjeeling, or, in all, a full week's journey. If a traveller leaving Rangoon for Darjeeling has started from any of the remoter districts of Burma, another week may be added for the time necessary to reach Rangoon and the inevitable delay there. To visit Coonoor involves a sea journey of seven days from Rangoon to Madras, owing to the circuitous route adopted by the steamers plying between Rangoon and Madras. A further two days is necessary to reach Coonoor. These lengthy and expensive journeys make it practically impossible for the great majority of residents in Burma to visit any hill-station for recreation or in search of health. In case of serious illness a visit to Europe is made whenever it is possible, rather than attempt the fatiguing journey necessary to reach Darjeeling or Coonoor.

Prior to the annexation of Upper Burma there was no place in British Burma sufficiently elevated to be beyond fever range. Since the annexation of Thebaw's dominions a large number of sites have become available. There are sites sufficiently elevated to make good hill-stations both in the Shan hills, in the mountains north-east of Bhamo, and in the Kachyen hills. An expedition under Brigadier Gatacre, commanding at Mandalay, and Colonel Strover, Commissioner of the Northern Division, has just returned from exploring the mountains near Bhamo for suitable sites for a sanitarium. Several positions were found, which, with sufficient expenditure in constructing roads and clearing jungle, might be made available for hill-stations in the future. All these localities are, however, under the disadvantages of being extremely difficult of access, at a considerable distance from any railway or river station, only approachable by a tedious journey through difficult country or a malarious terai; and in most cases they are situated in the territory of hostile or half-subdued tribes. There is, therefore, no immediate prospect of any of them being made available as a sanitarium.

The Byinge range of hills, recently explored by Mr. Symes, C.I.E., the officiating Commissioner of the Eastern Division of Upper Burma, appear likely to afford a suitable site for a sanitarium, and could be made almost immediately available. Mr. Symes has made an interesting report, which has been published. The Byinge hills form the boundary between the Pyimianana district and the Shan State of Swelon. The range runs north-west and south-east, and is about four miles in length. It consists of a succession of hills, having a height from 5,400ft. to 6,200ft. The summit consists of series of rolling grassy downs, which are described as well adapted for house sites. These hills can be reached at present in two fairly easy marches from the Shwemyo station on the railway from Rangoon to Mandalay. If a good road were constructed from Shwemyo Station to the hills the journey would be considerably shortened. Shwemyo Station is reached from Rangoon in sixteen hours by rail. If the proposed line to the Shan States is made from Shwemyo to Moby—a very likely route—a station might be established within ten miles of the summit of the Byinge hills.

Mr. Symes, who was greatly struck by the survey and climate of the Byinge hills, where he spent some days in January, gave the name of "Bellavista" to the site of his camp on those hills. He reports that in the middle of January a cool, pleasant breeze was blowing. The temperature at noon in the shade was 62 deg., and at midnight 46 deg. The water supply appeared sufficient. A difficulty which occurs in the case of many hill-stations is that the country through which they are approached is feverish. This objection does not appear to exist in the case of the Byinge hills. Mr. Symes was accompanied by Mr. Chomeley, the Assistant Commissioner of the adjoining district, and a party of fifty Burmans. They spent six days in the hills, and Mr. Symes and Mr. Chomeley slept in a small jungle tent. With the exception of one delicate Burman official, who had a slight attack of fever, none of the party suffered in health.

Mr. Symes mentions a fact which, although it can hardly be considered as adding to the capabilities or attractions of the Byinge hills as a sanitarium, will probably attract many visitors in search of sport. Game is plentiful, and Mr. Symes and his party found the hills intersected in all directions by the tracks of elephant, rhinoceros, bison, tiger, deer, and other game. It would probably be difficult to find any other locality in British territory where, in a healthy and pleasant climate, within two easy days' march of a railway station, such an abundance and variety of large game is to be found.

Mr. Symes has applied to the Chief Commissioner for a grant to enable him to construct roads and erect a house on the Byinge hills, to enable their capabilities as a sanitarium to be further tested. It is to be hoped that this application will be granted.

WHAT ARE THE HINDUS TO BE?

We translate the following extremely outspoken article from a recent number of the Swadeshamitran :—

Why should the Hindus occupy their present position? Such large countries as China and Russia possess independence, and are honoured among nations. Such small countries as England and France also occupy a very good position. But our country, shorn of its glory, has fallen low, and affords cause for reproach and sorrow. Are our countrymen deficient in sense or numbers? Being the inhabitants of a torrid zone, it may be that we are in a slight degree physically weak. Granting that, had we not the advantage of numbers to counteract that evil? Even with the aid of an overwhelming population, why have we not attained a good position? Why is it that we have not only lost our independence by becoming subject to various foreign rulers, but remain contented in our present slavish state, possessing a diversity of languages, religions, customs, manners, and sentiments? If we deeply consider this subject, we may find various causes for it. Some of them may be natural, being based on meteorological conditions, in that we inhabit a torrid climate; but the others are of our own seeking, brought on by our own perverseness and folly. We were ruined by the evil of our ways. It may be asked whether other nations did not possess evil habits, and whether they were not subject to vicissitudes of fortune. We must admit this; but at the same time we should not lose sight of the fact that other nations have ever endeavoured to rectify the evils brought on by their own misconduct and ignorance, and have ever striven after a higher and higher position. But we have at the very beginning adopted certain evil habits. For three thousand years we have been cursed with the system of caste. This is the origin of our evil. As a result of this institution, the Brahmans and Kshatriyas fell out among themselves, and have crippled our fighting power. In a reactionary spirit, Buddhism rose into being, and split the people not only in caste, but in religion, the result being that the old Rajahs fought with each other and brought on their own destruction. More than a thousand years since the great Rajahs in our country had disappeared, and, in their place, petty princes and chiefs assumed authority; and when the Mahomedans invaded the land, neither the petty rulers nor the people had power sufficient to unite and drive the intruders away. The fertility of our country and the habits of our countrymen have united in rendering us weak in body and in mind. Our Rajahs contracted the habit of passing their lives in the harems, while their ministers, the Brahmans, whiled away their time in meditation in the forests. Between the king and his minister, the country was wrecked and became a prey to invaders. Child-marriages had in the meantime become fashionable. The people had become illiterate, and had lost all interest in their country, so much so that they became indifferent as to which ruler reigned over them, and had come to such a pass as to think that their highest happiness was to be let alone by the ruler for the time being. If, in the countries of Europe and other countries, any danger should threaten, the king and the people, we have seen, would make a common cause, and drive away the invading enemy, valuing independence and the honour of their fatherland better than their lives. But in our country, the people have never evinced the idea of defending themselves against foreign aggression; when their king was down, they have not shown the bold spirit to set up another ruler over themselves, and march up to do battle with the enemy. Our people paid tribute to the king, whether he was a Hindu or Mahomedan, sitting on the Hindu throne. Love of country never once entered their hearts. Child-marriages undermined the strength of mind and body of our higher classes; and evil customs arose, which diminished the position and consequence of our women. It is a fact to be well borne in mind, that whichever nation loses respect for its women and denies them education and their rights, that nation is sure to go down. As long as our women enjoyed common rights and privileges, and were not debarred from educating themselves, our country had a name; but when our short-sighted Rishis began to curtail the rights of our women, we began to plunge on our downward course. The evils which have thus been the cause of our dissolution yet dwell with us. But we have happily rid ourselves of one of them. The thousand-and-one petty States which divided the land and cursed it with their tyranny are now no more, and in their place flourishes the one rule of Britain. But the other evils continue in force. The difference of caste is yet supreme. Child-marriages and the subjection of women continue to flourish as ever. The masses are guiltless of having acquired any knowledge, and are sunk in extreme ignorance. All these factors continue yet, and if the Hindus are to rise at all as a nation in independence and renown, these will have to change. To hope that the Kaling will be born, that the world will be deluged, that the sway of foreigners will cease, that the Brahmans and Kshatriyas will once more rule their own, is the forlorn hope of a blockhead.

A NATIVE MILITIA FOR THE PUNJAB.

The Civil and Military Gazette is strongly in favour of forming a standing militia in the Punjab. The Bengalee thinks it is now time for the Government to enlist educated native gentlemen in the defence of their own country. Already some of the fighting races have lost their martial spirit—a result greatly to be deplored. The Civil and Military Gazette very justly observes:—

Everyone who knows anything of the feelings of all classes of Punjabis must know that one of the chief, if not the chief—we might almost even say, the only—complaint which they make of the effects of British rule in the Punjab, is that by denying to them the use of arms in peace-time, it leads the sturdy ryot to forget that he has a man's strength and should have a man's spirit. All that is required in order to maintain the high martial reputation of our fighting Punjab races, without drawing them from their homes or their work, is suitable military encouragement and training. This would be effected by their territorial enrolment in a force of militia. With such a militia in their midst, brothers, cousins and uncles side by side in the ranks, as in the fighting days of yore, and ready as in those days to rally at the given summons in defence of their homes and rulers—with such a force always in their midst and paraded in each district twice a year in all the panoply of war, the Punjab races would never forget their warlike traditions, and we should hear no more of the complaint that British peace is sapping the military strength of the people of this province.

OBITUARY.

COLONEL CHARLES HAYTER, C.B.

By his old comrades in arms in India and, indeed, throughout the service, the death of Charles George Hayter, C.B., on the 1st inst., at Croydon, at the age of 50, will be read with sincere sorrow and regret. Distinguished, among the many distinguished men of our Indian Army, he has at last fallen a victim to the treacherous climate of Upper Burma, where so many grand men have now been lost to us. Joining the 34th Madras Light Infantry at the early age of sixteen, in August, 1856, he volunteered for active service during the great Indian Mutiny, and was attached to the Shahabad Field Force under Brigadier-General Douglas. During the campaign 1857-58-59 he was posted to the Madras Rifles, and frequently brought himself to notice by his cool courage and extraordinary daring. He was a born leader of men, and when any difficult or hazardous undertaking had to be carried out Hayter was invariably selected for the duty. Although a lad barely seventeen, those placed under him never hesitated to follow or obey. They had every confidence in his leadership, and he seemed to infuse his own courageous nature throughout the rank-and-file. On one occasion, with a small handful of Sepoys, he surprised and captured the strong rebel post of Maindoorah, capturing and destroying twenty-six large river-boats, and dispersing the enemy with heavy loss. This was in August, 1858. A few days afterwards he was at the taking of Suhar, on the left bank of the Soane, when, with his weakened company, he successfully defended the bridge of boats against enormous odds. We have not space to give his many gallant deeds in detail, but we trust that ere long his eventful and useful life in the service of his country may be duly chronicled. He took part in the actions of Noorpoor, Surragha, and Turcole, when those towns were destroyed. For his services in the N.W. Provinces and in Central India he received the Mutiny medal. When the Bhootan War broke out, five years later, he served with the Eastern Field Force, under General Tombs, G.B., V.C., and it was he who constructed the road over which the successful advance on Dewangeri was made, the capture of which stronghold practically ended the war. For his services in this campaign he received a medal and clasp, and shortly afterwards he was engaged in an expedition against the Naga tribes. For some years he remained in Assam as an assistant commissioner, and frequently distinguished himself in leading successful expeditions against unruly tribes. As an engineer he opened out roads and built bridges, and by his firm and just administration of the law established peace and security in his district. When the Afghan war broke out, in 1878, he returned to active military life, and served throughout the campaign, being mentioned in despatches and receiving the medal and a brevet lieutenant-colonelcy, besides being thanked by the Governor-General of India in Council for settling claims arising out of that campaign. In 1881 he served in the Mashood Wuzuree Campaign as director of transport, and at the outbreak of the war in Egypt (1882) he was appointed director of transport to the Indian Contingent, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir; mentioned in despatches, C.B., medal and clasp, 3rd class Medjidie and Khedive's star. A characteristic anecdote may be related, showing what a man of action he was. When the expedition left India he remained at Bombay, completing the organisation of his transport. Some thousands of mules had arrived at Suez, but they were not disembarked, owing to the want of lighters, which had been sent for to Ismaliah. Gen. Macpherson was in despair; a whole week had passed, and his force was unable to move. At last Hayter arrived, found a frantic appeal from his general to have his transport landed as soon as possible, and in five minutes the mule drivers were landed and distributed along the shore. Then he signalled to the transport to "throw all the mules overboard." This was done at once, and, with the exception of three, all swam to the shore safely, and were captured by their drivers. The next morning the column moved on! Shortly after the Egyptian Campaign Colonel Hayter was appointed a colonel on the staff, and was actively employed against the Tavoy rebels, receiving a medal and clasp for his Burmese service. When Brigadier-General Wolsley returned to England last year Colonel Hayter was appointed to the command at Bhamo; but a long life of exposure and incessant hard work, coupled with the deadly climate of that terrible district, told on his naturally strong constitution, and he only reached England to die. Strange to say, his sister died almost at the same moment, and both were laid to rest in the same grave at the Croydon Cemetery on Saturday last.—Broad Arrow.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These Shares on Saturday rose 1-16, otherwise there was no change. Mysore Shares were last quoted 6 1-16 to 6 3-16 x new, Nundydroog 2 to 2½, Indian Consolidated 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 9s. 6d. to 10s., Ooregum Ordinary 2 1-16 to 2 3-16, ditto Preference 2 to 2½, Devala-Moyar 2s. 9d. to 3s. 3d., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 6s. to 6s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 10s. 6d. to 11s., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s., South-east Mysore 1s. 9d. to 2s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 1s. to 1s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 13s. to 14s., New South-east Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

So far as legislative business is concerned, the Simla season promises to be a quiet one. During the last few weeks in Calcutta most of the urgent measures were dealt with by Government, and the programme now before them is not very formidable. The Leper Bill is still in abeyance, and until the opinions of local Governments and Administrations are received will remain so. The Factory Bill, as has already been announced, is postponed till the cold weather of 1890-91. The Cantonment Bill, so far as it relates to house property, will, however, most likely be executive discussed and passed, while the amendment to the Merchants' Shipping Bill will also probably receive attention.

THE question whether the Madras Surgeon-General's family is entitled to travelling expenses when accompanying him to and from the seat of Government, has been settled by the Supreme Government. It has been decided that such expenses are admissible to and from Ootacamund, if the Surgeon-General's stay in Madras exceeds four months.

A DUEL AT PONDICHERY.—On the evening of Sunday, April 13th, while the Zouave band was playing at the Place Dupleix, the public were treated to a pugilistic encounter between a gentleman and a military officer. The latter it appears had challenged the former to fight a duel a day or two previously, and as the gentleman declined to have anything to do with so dangerous an undertaking, the officer took occasion to offer him a public insult at the band stand. From high words they came to blows, and not content with this, a duel was arranged between them, to take place in the Jardin du Roi, at 2.30 P.M., on Tuesday, April 15th. Accordingly at the time and place appointed, the combatants met with their respective seconds, and the encounter began. The military officer had the advantage over his opponent, whom he wounded in the fore-arm, and honour having been declared satisfied by the drawing of blood, the affair terminated.

A GOOD many suggestions have been made regarding the name for the services hitherto known as Uncovenanted, and now the Association moving for inquiry into the grievances has taken to calling itself "The European Civil Services Association," a name which has never been generally adopted. A correspondent suggests that the body of officers in question should call themselves in the aggregate "The Departmental Services." This term is short and compact; it includes all; it is descriptive; it is strictly true; it makes no invidious distinctions; and it draws no comparisons.

AN ESSAY ON INFLUENZA.

A Babu, who styles himself an F.A., a few days ago applied for a post worth Rs. 25 per month. The head of the Department, who is of a very humorous nature, told him to write an essay on influenza. Pen, ink, and paper being supplied him, the following was the result:—

Sir,—As I am requested by your honor to write an essay on influenza all I can say is that this infernal Epidemic, which has fallen on our mother country like a great calamity, is caused by the concentrated efforts of minute bacus of the animalculæ tribe of unforeseen microscopical animal life. Like the old plagues of Egypt it is deteriorating in the extreme, carrying its enormous degenerating contamination through every household families, not excepting your humble servant, who has suffered too much the details of fever in its augmented state with a pertinacity that would have done the heart of Euscapalius good to have interviewed.

Notwithstanding, nevertheless I am now all square, your honor, enjoying salubrity of health, hence my ability to write this hard subject matter.

Although this infernal, inhuman disease, is not dangerous except for the old decrepit one-foot-in-the-grave sort of paralytic people, yet is fraught with too great after-consequences, such as Pneumonia, Bronchitis, Catarrh, et hoc genus omne (you see I am veiled in few Latin terms), causing thereby some care to be taken with ourselves afterwards.

It is great, great pity your honor asked me to write such kind of great difficult, inexperienced task. No B.A. I am sure would be spritely enough to undertake such eccentric task without purloining his intellectual faculties to the utmost tension.

Your honor will kindly excuse my writing to a greater length, although I could give much information on the statistic of this great and downfelling disease on bed with all items of fever and nose running all day and night, my wife is still suffering, but I am earnestly working the oracle with the Gods to minimise the malady by giving alms and all things to poor helpless beggars asking much, from your humble servant who is at present greatly impecunious for want of job, two children besides wife and myself to feed and one more child coming soon yet unborn owing to wife's fault.

Hoping to be favoured by your kind consideration.

THE Municipal authorities of Pondicherry have come across some very valuable solid masonry pillars and columns carved out of pure granite. It is supposed that they form the surplus stock of the columns obtained from the once famous temple of Ginghee, and which now ornaments the Place Dupleix.

THERE seems reason to believe that rubies exist in Burma outside of the area which has acquired so much interest as the Ruby Mines District. Persistent rumours of long standing point to several mines in the Shan States, where the inhabitants are deterred by superstition from gathering the precious stones. In one case in particular a valuable mine is believed to be jealously guarded by supernatural beings, and a story is related of these spirits overtaking a party of ruby-thieves and recovering their booty. When we remember how successfully the old buccaneers kept adventurers off from the caves and islands where their treasure was concealed by murdering a man, and charging his spirit to guard the spot, we may easily believe that interested parties have spread weird stories about ruby mines known to them, so that the fact of the existence of the mines has become involved in mystery, and the place where they are is not to be found except by systematic investigation.

The School Board Chronicle says:—"It is a library of bright, lively, wholesome reading in short pieces—about twenty separate tales, fables, poems, articles, and sketches to the volume. Now that the work has been so handsomely and happily revised, no school library will be quite what it should be without it."

The Guardian says:—"We hope that the children of the present generation will welcome, as we remember doing, 'The Parents' Cabinet.' So much did we love the book that the sight is a real refreshment."

The Englishwoman's Review says:—"The work will be prized, we believe, by a new circle of readers for its own sake, as well as by those who re-read it to recall the impressions of their childhood."

The Scotsman says:—"All the articles are written in popular language, being well brought within the capacity of those for whom the work has been compiled. . . . Will prove one of the most popular productions of the season for the rising generation."

The Daily News says:—"Each book is complete in itself, in token of which the order is indicated, not by figures, but by stars. . . . Mrs. Hill was the inventor of this convenient method. . . . May be separated without assuming the appearance of odd volumes."

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—

J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 19, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 2nd May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 30th April; and from Calcutta to the 29th April.

THE VICEROY arrived in Simla on Friday afternoon, April 25th, making a long march in from his camp on the Fagoo side of the Giri river.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, having completed his tour of inspection in the hill-cantonments of the N.W. Provinces, is now in Simla.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA was detained at Mozufferpur recently by an attack of fever, but his lordship has quite recovered, and is now back again in Calcutta.

THE vacation of the Calcutta High Court will this year extend from September 17th to November 26th. The vacation Judges will be the Hons. H. T. Prinsep and A. Wilson.

COLONEL JOHN BIDDULPH has returned from furlough, and assumed charge of the Ajmere Commissionership.

COLONEL W. LUCKHARDT, C.B., Commissary-General, Bombay Army, retires shortly from the service.

THE health of Mr. Lane, Chief Superintendent of Telegraphs, has broken down, necessitating his going home on leave.

MR. C. DILLON, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Public Prosecutor, ad interim, in the N.W. Provinces during the absence of Mr. Ross on leave.

THE hired armoured-steamer Somali arrived in Bombay on April 22nd. She reports that while lying at Zanzibar the gunboat Conquest captured a slave-dhow and 78 slaves, whom she liberated. Cattle-plague was raging in Zanzibar, many carcasses lying rotting in the suburbs. Food, in consequence, was very scarce, and the men of the English squadron were on salt provisions.

TANTIA BHIL's lieutenant, Bhoudria, has been killed in Holkar's territory on Thursday. He and five followers were shot down on the borders of the Nimar district.

A RUMOUR has gained currency that the Board of Revenue in the N.W. Provinces is to be augmented by a third member, representing the Revenue interests of Oudh. There is no truth in this report, though under the reorganisation scheme now before the Secretary of State it is proposed that the Oudh and N.W.P. Land Revenue should equally be under the control of the Board.

ANOTHER mill of 30,000 spindles has been opened in Bombay.

MONEY has become easier in India, the Bank of Bombay having reduced its rate of interest to 10 per cent. and the Bank of Bengal to 9 per cent.

THE second exhibition of the Calcutta Fine Arts Society is announced for Dec. 20th.

THE State Dinner and Lovee will be held at Viceregal Lodge on May 24th, and the Birthday Ball on May 29th.

THE VICEROY had some fair sport in the Dun, and on the day when the party bagged a tiger there were no less than four tigers on foot at the same moment.

THE sportsmen also had the opportunity of seeing a rogue elephant, which, however, was judiciously allowed to escape unharmed, as they were unprepared for such big game.

HIS EXCELLENCY also enjoyed some very good fishing, and landed a fine mahseer over 30lbs.

THE VICEROY, accompanied by Lord Kerry, Colonel Ardagh, Dr. Fenn, and Captain Brazier Creagh marched in thirty miles on Friday, the 28th ult., from Dehra, arriving at Simla on Saturday.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR AND LADY HARRIS are still at Mahableshwar.

H.E. LORD HARRIS has accepted the office of patron of the Bombay Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

THE Ameer is still remaining quietly at Mazar-i-Sherif, and although preparations have been made for his journey and reception at Herat, it is just as likely that he will return to Cabul direct.

THE Afghan Governor of Lughman, Nizam-ud-Dowla, Herati, whose death was lately announced while an official inquiry was being made into his accounts, has been posthumously found guilty of embezzling State funds.

THE Ameer's son has ordered part of the dead Governor's property to be sold to make good his defalcations.

A CIRCULAR letter, signed by five of the oldest civilians in the Bombay Presidency, has been addressed to all officers of the Civil Service over ten years' standing regarding the Mamlutdars' Indemnity.

MUCH indignation has been caused in Calcutta by a new Income Tax circular addressed to the leading merchants in that city.

THE ticca-gharrywallas in the Meerut Cantonments have struck, and the public are greatly inconvenienced.

COAL has been discovered on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, being struck by workmen who were digging the foundations of a bridge over the small river Eb, in Chota Nagpore. The seam is five feet thick, and only twenty-four feet from the surface, while the quality is reported better than that of Warora.

MESSRS. H. S. KING AND Co. have been appointed London Agents to the Government of Mysore on the same terms as they hold a similar position with respect to the Hyderabad Government.

ORDERS have been received from the Government of India for the speedy construction of buildings at Rawalpindi, for the Military Accounts Offices by April 1891.

MAJOR BARR, Resident at Gwalior, takes three months leave immediately, and Colonel Abbot, Political Agent at Jhallawar, will most probably officiate in his absence.

MR. F. W. PORTER, Allahabad, C.S., lately had a very narrow escape coming down the hill from Simla. Both tarts in his tonga turned a simultaneous and unintentional somersault, and scattered their fare pretty considerably. The Collector, however, soon collected himself, and another pair of animals, returning from the next changing station, were secured, and the journey ended happily.

THE Lahore military paper hears that Sir George Greaves has nominated Colonel R. L. H. Curteis, 2nd Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment, for the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General at Army head-quarters, Bombay, which will become vacant on the 1st July next, when the present incumbent (Lieut.-Col. H. L. Dundas's) tenure expires. Col. Curteis is a graduate of the Staff College, and is now commanding his battalion in the Madras Presidency. When he takes up his duties in July next, he will have been three years in command of a battalion, and he has also had five years' experience at the Horse Guards as Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General. He is probably, therefore, the right man for the right place.

NOTES.

THE Times telegram from Calcutta yesterday, which we re-produce to-day, gives little news of interest from India. The "gods" are on Olympus, and have left the plains to dulness and diatribes against the Simla exodus.

THE correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that some Sikh vagrants have been arrested in Burma, and are supposed to be emissaries of Dhuleep Singh. They are charged with attempting to corrupt the military and the police. This telegram, it may be remarked, comes from Calcutta, which during the "silly season" there is a place from whence emanates all manner of rumours and reports. Dhuleep Singh's funds are not yet in a condition to enable him to corrupt anybody but himself; and if they were, how corrupting a Burman policeman would help him to regain the sovereignty of the Punjab is a mystery which only "our own correspondent" could explain.

THE same correspondent telegraphs that on Sunday night it was stated in Calcutta that Sir Frederick Roberts will leave India early next year, and that Lord Wolseley will probably succeed him. Very likely such a statement was made—possibly after dinner, when there was nothing else to talk about; but why go to the expense to telegraph it to London?

"OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT," however, must live, and must take such pabulum as he can lay his hands upon, and so he further telegraphs that a Bombay Native paper recently published an account of a dinner at which a number of Hindoo gentlemen met Dr. Emma Ryder, an American Lady, and Pundita Ramabi, a Christian convert. Several Hindoos who were present had been ordered by their caste—the Panchayets—to undergo the ceremonies of purification. There is evidently a dearth of news in Calcutta—only this and nothing more.
